MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Propagating.

This month of September will be a very busy time, if all is done that could be done. Several things could wait a few weeks, but may as well be done at once, because the end of the month finds us more than busy.

Vincas.

Put in a large lot of the variegated and Harrisonii vincas. Take the long growths that have spread along the ground. Don't use the very tender tops, for they are too soft; neither the first few joints, for they are hard and woody. Let there be one pair of leaves above the sand and one eye beneath. Keep the sand well wet and shaded from the bright sun and in four weeks they will be rooted.

Never in our years of experience with vases, etc., have we had enough of this pretty, so-called vine. It is much prettier than the English ivy, not so stiff and yet endures neglect about as well.

Ivy Geraniums.

This is also a good time to put in your stock of ivy geraniums. Of these there are seldom too many when the end of May arrives. You need not use your propagating bench for these cuttings, as bottom heat is not necessary. Fill some of your tulip flats with two or three inches of sand and make them your propagating beds. It gives precisely the same conditions for the next five or six weeks and you can move the flats to any convenient place, to a cool house, for instance, and delay potting off until time and room are at hand.

In advising the taking of cuttings of all zonal geraniums last week I said that the sweet-scented, variegated, bronze and tricolor varieties we preferred to put in the propagating bed or sand, so don't delay in getting them in, and putting them in these flats is rather better than the bed, for after being rooted they will do another month very well in a cool, light house without potting off.

Lifting Bouvardias.

Bouvardias should be lifted and removed to the house without delay. They make roots in the pots or bench quicker when surroundings are warm than when chilly. These bouvardias need very careful lifting. Their roots are very delicate and success in lifting them will depend on how few of these roots you lose. If they have been planted in a sandy loam they will lift well at any time, but if in a clay loam and the weather has been dry you will have to give them a good soaking over night and lift the next day.

If you care only for one crop of flowers from these bouvardias, which is always easily had for Christmas, then they will do very well in 6-inch pots. But if you have a house that you can keep at 60 degrees, then five inches of soil on a bench is much the best place for them, for after a good crop of flowers around the holidays they will make a strong growth and you will get flowers again in March and on.

In lifting these tropical plants save all the roots you can and spray them five or six times a day, for the first week, but the need of that will depend largely on the weather. If they have been stopped or pinched within a week or two they won't need any more, but if that has been neglected, then pinch the strong, leading shoots as soon as they are established after lifting.

Stevia Serrata.

Another plant of a very different nature which can soon be lifted and potted is the sweet stevia, or Stevia serrata, the only one of its tribe worth growing. Many florists, perhaps, think this not profitable to grow, but charge enough for its spikes of feathery flowers and it is as well worth house room as are several other things and we are repeatedly asked for it. It is a rampant grower and little plants planted out in early June are now eighteen inches high and as much across.

Although it should not see the inside of a greenhouse for a month, it is well to pot it now, in 6-inch or 7-inch pots, and stand in a shady place a few days. After its recovery from the lifting stand or plunge them in the full sun and leave them there until signs of a frost. You can hustle in a great many plants if they are in pots, even by moonlight, at short notice, but if to be dug it is a different chore. Of all times that this flower is appreciated it is at the holidays, so keep them out of doors as long as possible, for if too early under glass they are out of flower before the season.

Don't Delay.

There may be other plants you wish to save for the winter and which must be lifted. Do not delay. They root quicker while the soil and atmosphere are warm than in chilly October. I noticed in Philadelphia a large grower of Deutzia gracilis, which he grows on his own grounds and does not import. He had his stock of these lifted by the middle of August. This was new to me, for all deciduous hardy shrubs are moved after the foliage is dropped. I readily saw the object of lifting and potting these deutzias so early. They were kept sprayed and shaded for a week or two and then went on making roots and became established in the pots and were in very much better order to force for Easter than plants lifted after all root growth had stopped and too often dried out during winter. Think this over. It may apply to many other plants that we are too late in lifting.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

GENERAL NOTES.

It is high time now that any stock that may have been planted outside should be lifted and potted. This should be done at once, so that the plants can get well rooted in the pots before the flower buds are swelling. Give them a large enough pot so that the roots are not crowded or broken. Shade them for a week or so, keep frequently sprayed over and these plants will hardly know that they were shifted.

The plants on the benches should be kept tied up straight, because, after the bud is taken and the stem is getting harder and more woody every day, unless the shoots are straight they will be apt to snap off where they are tied, and a crooked stem detracts from the value of the flower.

Side shoots and suckers multiply with amazing rapidity after the bud is taken and these should be kept pulled off if one is desirous of concentrating all the energies of the plant in the proper direction of flower production.

Buds should now be taken right along as they appear, as there is no longer any question of not getting the right bud. Any bud that appears from now on will develop a perfect flower without any trouble. In the case of stock that is being run with the idea of getting flowers as late as possible this would not, of course, apply, as the idea in that case is to wait until the last bud appears, which will not be for some weeks yet.

Now is the time to see that the early buds (which, in the case of Merstham Yellow and odd ones of other kinds, are just showing the first tinge of color) are absolutely free from black or green fly or red spider. Fumigate lightly, but persistently, until you are satisfied that the buds are absolutely clean, as one fly left now means a numerous progeny before the flower is developed. In cases where the green fly is numerous I have dusted the bud very heavily with tobacco dust, which is generally effective in its operation.

Many flowers are annually spoiled by red spider and not infrequently its presence is entirely unknown to the grower, unless he watches his plants closely, and knows red spider when he sees it. One grower last year sent me samples of his flowers that had been "struck by blight" which, on a close investigation, proved to be nothing more or less than red spider. It seems to suck all the substance out of the petal, leaving it limp and worse than useless, and spoils the whole flower in a few days.

Look under the foliage, up near the bud, and if any spider is present put a sprayer on the hose and wash each plant individually. All this may, perhaps, seem unnecessary to the average grower, who may figure out that he can syringe his plants any time and clean them up in good season. He may and, on the other hand, he may get busy with something else and forget it, and next month, when a dry atmosphere is essential in the mum house, he may find himself in a position where, if he sprays his plants, he runs the chances of spoiling lots of flowers by dampening the petals, and if he does not spray he will lose his flowers by insects. A stitch in time saves nine.

Feeding.

September is the month when feeding is necessary and when it does the most good, because now the bud is swelling and will appreciate all the feeding, in reason, that is given to it. The chrysanthemum is a gross feeder, but at the same time care should be taken not to give a strong dose at any one time, or it will rot the feeding fibers of the roots and do far more harm than good.

There are a large variety of fertilizers in use by the experts and the results attained by their intelligent use are remarkable. Growers of European training rely a good deal on Thompson's chrysanthemum manure, ichthemie guano and Clay's fertilizer, all of which are standards of British manufacture, safe to use, easily applied and always satisfactory. A light dusting once a week over the soil is the usual way of applying these fertilizers.

Some growers are getting remarkable results from the use of Bonora, a liquid chemical preparation made in this country and of which we may hear more later. Other chemicals, as previously mentioned in these notes, are nitrate of soda, sulphate of ammonia and sulphate and nitrate of potash. A safe proportion of any of these is one ounce of chemical to four gallons of water, and they are best applied alternately with liquid made from the natural manures of the cow, sheep or horse.

It would seem to some, perhaps, that one good fertilizer, if it contained all that a plant needed, is sufficient to use, but when one sees at an exhibition the splendid flowers set up by growers who use a wide range of fertilizers, as compared with the stock of the grower who does not, one is forced to conclude that it pays to "change the feed" for the mum.

The question of how much to feed or how often I cannot answer, as it must be governed by the growth of the plant. When the leaves get very brittle and almost black in color it may be assumed that the danger signal is being set, and when, as often happens, the neck of the flower splits and half severs itself, it may be taken as an indication that feeding should cease entirely on the variety affected, the semi-decapitation of the bud being nature's way of checking the excess of sap which is rushing up to the bud too quickly.

A variety, like William Duckham, that makes strong growth and thick, fleshy leaves does not need and, in fact, will not stand so much feeding as will weaker growing kinds.

There are so very many points to be considered that, as I said before, I cannot say definitely just what proportion of feeding a plant will stand, but there is no plant grown that will so well repay intelligent study in this direction as the chrysanthemum. CHARLES H. TOTTY.

WHITE FLY.

Among the chrysanthemum's enemies we do not see mention of a small white fly about the size of the well-known green fly. Tobacco smoke does not affect it. Is it the little white fly referred to as getting into vegetable forcing houses in winter? Is there a remedy other than hydrocyanic acid gas? R. B.

The little white fly referred to is the same insect that attacks tomatoes and other vegetables under glass. It is a species of aleyrodes, probably vaporariorum, commonly termed the snowy fly. I have not hitherto heard of its being found in any quantity on chrysanthemums, though in some sections it is a perfect pest in greenhouses. As this grower states, tobacco smoke does not touch it and the only remedy in desperate cases is the hydrocyanic gas. This fly, in common with many other insects, may be prevented from getting much of a foothold by a vigorous and persistent use of the hose several times a day in bright weather. C. H. T.

FOLIAGE FOR WORK.

We are already getting the oak with the red-bronze tint, and it is one of the most useful things we have in hardy foliage; up to last week the bronze galax leaves were being used by florists, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser, but I was told that there would be no more for some months. While speaking of this I may refer to the fact that the plant Galax aphylla is grown in this country, and the slender spikes of white flowers are pretty, it is chiefly used as a rock plant, yet the bog-garden is its proper place, and planted in a moist boggy position fully exposed to the sun we ought to be able to grow it and get the bronzy tint on the leaves. It seems strange that we should have to send to America for foliage which ought to be grown here. At one time we depended upon importations for smilax (Medeola asparagoides), but now we have growers who do it well, and find it a profitable crop. The Prunus Pissardi must be profitable for market work where it colors well. The best colored foliage comes from dry, sandy soil, and it should be worth planting by those who have suitable conditions. At a recent meeting, Geo. Paul & Son, Cheshunt, showed an improved variety of the purple-leaved peach; the foliage was of a very bright hue, and it should make a useful thing to grow for market. Last season some people must have made a good revenue from Ampelopsis Veitchii; beautifully colored leaves were in the market, and made from 50 to 75 cents per dozen bunches of about twelve leaves in each. Rhus cotinus is another plant which, where it will color well, is worth growing for cut foliage. Some of the ribes color well in suitable positions, and there are many other deciduous trees which should be worth growing but it would be of no use to plant them in cold, wet ground or where they do not get the full benefit of all the sunshine available.

DOROTHY PERKINS.

In the REVIEW of August 31 we see a note of "Plants for Easter," in which it is said that "Dorothy Perkins is rather more difficult to get into bloom at Easter than any other Rambler." We have a large list of florists who are using Dorothy Perkins and say that it is the greatest bloomer of any rose that they put in their greenhouses. It may be all right that the plants mentioned in the article referred to are not strong enough for forcing and that outdoor-grown two-year-old Dorothy Perkins would be better, but the writer is entirely wrong as far as its being difficult to get into bloom. It is one of the greatest bloomers used.

GERANIUMS.

In taking up geraniums in October to put in the greenhouse do you put the geraniums in pots and place them on top of the beds, or do you set the plants right in the soil and then place them in pots in May, when they are ready to sell? Any information you may give me will be greatly appreciated, as I am new at the business. F. W. S.

Florists very seldom do either of the above. We take a crop of cuttings off the plants outdoors the first week of September and then just before frost, with us early October, we take another

THE RETAIL

FLORIST.....

HAND BASKET OF DAISIES.

This particular basket was a pale magenta pink of the style used for some time past by wedding attendants. One side is flattened against the handle, which is a loop to slip over the wrist. The design as worked out here is the simplest possible. A dozen Asparagus Sprengeri sprays with several times as many Shasta daisies is its sum and substance.

Sharpen the lower ends of the long Sprengeri and insert in the shallow filling of sphagnum, outwards and upwards, airily. The moss should be packed in almost hard, and tied in very closely, for there cannot be much depth on account of the open sides of the basket. Stem daisies full length and insert in a close, irregular group about the handle, and scattered toward the front.

This design could be considerably elaborated by throwing out a daisy chain along the asparagus sprays and by adding more long-stemmed flowers in the front, shower effect. A ribbon wrapping around the handle might be added, but without conspicuous bows. Stiff-stemmed roses or carnations could be employed to fill the basket, but not as gracefully as daisies, asters, cosmos, swainsona, or all green, as adiantum or asparagus. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

lot, taking every part of the plant that will make a cutting, and let the old plants freeze up. Old geraniums take a lot of bench-room, more than they are worth.

If you are very short of stock of any variety, then if you will take a crop of cuttings off now, the old plants will be in good shape to lift and pot in 5-inch or 6-inch pots early in October, or before hard frost. Pot firmly. They will look shabby for a few weeks, but will soon recover and after a "standover" and cleaning will give you a lot of cuttings during winter if kept about 50 degrees at night.

FALL-SOWN SWEET PEAS.

My attention was directed to a very fine lot of sweet peas at one of the New York shows this year and inquiry revealed the fact that they were grown by Frank M. Ryan, gardener to Wm. F. Woods, of Greenwich, Conn. In response to my inquiry as to how he did it, Mr. Ryan sent me a few cultural notes on his system of fall sowing, which he claims produces an earlier and much more vigorous growth than is possible from spring-sown seed. With his permission I pass his notes on to the REVIEW for reproduction in your columns if you see fit.

C. H. TOTTY.

We sow the seed quite thickly about the first of October. Care should be taken not to sow too early, as the vines get too tall and later lodge and rot in winter. We lost a good many from this cause last winter. Try and have them about four or five inches high when the growth stops for the winter.

For protection we use boards of any thickness and about one foot wide, running lengthwise the row and braced where necessary, or about the same plan as used in some places for blanching celery. On the boards we put narrow sash about sixteen inches wide, made on purpose for this. We do not put on the boards until it gets quite cold at night, say four or five degrees of frost, and we take or run the sash off every day that the glass is anything above freezing, the idea being to gradually inure the vines to the extreme cold they will have to stand through the winter. Before zero weather, or about Christmas, we cover all over the sides and top with a good layer of horse manure or litter and leave thus until Old Sol is warming up things a little again, say about the last of February. After this date a crack of air may be given on all favorable days and about April 1 everything can be removed from around the vines and the trellis put up.

Do not be in a hurry to pull out any seemingly dead vines in the spring.

As I mentioned before, we lost a few varieties and had to sow them over in the spring, but what survived were better at the last picking than were the spring-sown ones at any time, besides being fifteen days earlier.

As our row was under four feet of snow and manure from New Year's to March 12, I do not think the glass entirely essential, except for the little extra heat generated in spring.

THE CHICAGO PREMIUMS.

The preliminary list of premiums has been issued for the November exhibition of the Horticultural Society of Chicago. In general it is a reprint of previous preliminary lists, but in several of its features it has been strengthened. Profiting by each year's experience this society has eliminated the classes which do not produce competition until it is now the practice to award from ninety to ninety-five per cent of all premiums offered. Collections of cut blooms of chrysanthemums are now limited to two, for twelve and forty varieties. For 100 blooms, arrangement and quality to be considered, premiums of $50, $40 and $30 are offered. The classes for chrysanthemum plants are of course retained. For miscellaneous plants the premiums are liberal ($25 and $15 for six araucarias, as an example) and are likely to be all awarded.

The interest in the rose classes has been steadily on the increase and this should prove one of the best features of the show, as several of the large cut flower growers at Chicago are looking for the awards as ammunition for advertising. For 100 Beauties the premiums are $100, $75 and $50; for 100 Liberty or Richmond, $35 and $25; for 100 blooms in other classes, $20 and $12; for classes for forty blooms, $6 and $3.

There are forty-four classes for carnations, exclusive of classes for seedlings. It looks as though there must be a place for everything.

Premiums for floral arrangements, table decorations, etc., will be announced later. The show will likely be held in Brooke's Casino, Wabash avenue and Hubbard court, and copies of the premium list may be had on request to E. A. Kanst, assistant secretary, 5700 Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago.

DEATH OF RICHARD DEAN.

Of the large number of our craftsmen who came from Great Britain to America within the past forty years, few but will feel a sense of personal loss at the announcement of the death of Richard Dean, at London. His failing health had been known and deplored but it was not until a few days before his death that the brief span left to him was realized. On August 21 his son, G. R. Dean, in a letter to the REVIEW, said:

"He has been a sufferer for the last two years from sciatica and diabetes, from which at his advanced age, 75 years, he had no hope of recovering. I am sorry to have to inform you that he is on his deathbed and we are hourly expecting his passing away." He died that night.

Mr. Dean was a valued contributor to the REVIEW, writing on seed trade and florists' plant topics, subjects on which he was thoroughly informed through long years of activity in the trade, but our loss, great as we feel it to be, is as nothing compared to the loss his death brings to British horticulture. He was a man of ceaseless activity, an authority on seed growing and on florists' flowers, being one of the first to be honored with the Victoria Medal in Horticulture. But it was through his secretarial connections that he gained an acquaintance with horticulturists as broad as that of any man in England. He was gifted with a peculiar aptitude for secretarial duties and for flower show management. For nearly twenty years he was secretary of the National Chrysanthemum Society. He served in the same office for the National Dahlia Union, for the sweet pea bicentenary celebration, for two hailstorm relief funds, for the great international exhibition of 1866, for the National Floricultural Society, which was merged into the floral committee of the Royal Horticultural Society, of which Mr. Dean was for long the oldest member; for many other trade movements, including the Postal Reform Committee, which was largely instrumental in securing the establishment of the parcels post, so great a boon to the nursery and seed trades of Great Britain. He had been a willing and able worker in every trade movement in London for the past forty years.

Mr. Dean was a keen debater and a ready writer. He was a regular contributor to many horticultural publications in England.

often you may not lose a plant in the field during a dry season, but as soon as you get them into the house they will begin to die off. You may bring the spores in with the plants or they might be in the soil on the beds before you plant. A close, damp atmosphere will aggravate the case and so will deep planting.

One of the best things to prevent this disease is air-slaked lime, or, in fact, lime in any form. Sprinkle it on the soil and stir it in, and dust it on the plants. When you water keep the water away from the stems as much as you can, and do not spray the plants any more than you have to. Give all the air you can and keep the atmosphere as dry as possible.

There is no reason why you should not be as successful in the south as you were in the north, as far as stem-rot is concerned. Many growers think that the disease is produced by improper treatment, etc. Such is not the case. The spores are in the soil and it only takes certain conditions to start them into activity. Just where they come from first of all I cannot say, but I suppose that, like Topsy, "they just grow." By keeping the plants in good, healthy, robust condition they will be able to help fight it off, too. This does not necessarily mean a highly fed or rank-growing condition, but by preventing any slight checks that may be caused, one way or another, and by promoting a steady, sturdy growth. A. F. J. BAUR.

VARIETIES FOR SOUTH AFRICA.

I am doing a general business in cut flowers and plants at Durban, Natal, South Africa, and would like to grow some American varieties of carnations. Will you please tell me what are the best hot weather varieties? We get no frost in winter here, so that the best summer varieties in the United States should do well under our conditions.

C. G.

The varieties that seem to stand warm weather best in our climate are about as follows: Flora Hill, Queen Louise, The Belle, Moonlight and Indiana Market, in white; Mrs. Lawson, Crocker and Floriana, for pink; Flambeau, Estelle and Cardinal for scarlet. Enchantress holds up fine in light pink and Prosperity comes white in warm weather and holds up well in size. I would not confine myself to these varieties, however, as sometimes we find that varieties do finely where we would expect them to do the least.

FERN CULTURE.

[An essay by Wm. Scott, gardener to Mrs. Joseph Eastman, read before the Tarrytown Horticultural Society at its August meeting.]

Fern culture is a subject far too extensive to be treated in anything like a comprehensive manner in an essay such as this, so I will not attempt to go into the matter fully, but will take up that portion relating to greenhouse culture, which, I think, will be of most interest to the majority here.

Propagating From Spores.

The raising of ferns from spores is at once the easiest and most convenient method of increase with varieties that adapt themselves to this means of propagation. The selection of the spores is necessarily the first step. This with some of the varieties requires strict ob-

CARNATION QUERIES.

What is the right distance for a carnation bench from the glass where there is no glass in the side walls? How many carnation plants will be required in two houses 18x50 with side benches three and a half feet wide and center benches six and a half feet? What depth should these benches be? Please name the six or eight most profitable carnations to grow, two or three each of white, red and pink.

F. & F.

The properly built carnation house either has no side benches or else it has glass in the side walls, at least the one on the south side of the house. It does not matter so much on the north side, as the wall will not shade the plants. There should be at least two feet of clear space between the top of the soil and the lowest part of the glass. Most varieties will need more room, but by selecting the dwarfer ones, like Lawson and its sports, for these side beds you can get along very well.

I would not plant very close to the wall on the south side, but stay away at least a foot. That would enable you to plant four rows lengthwise on the south bed, five rows on the north bed and nine or ten rows on the center bed. Set them twelve inches apart in the rows and you can easily figure up what you will need to fill your beds, by measuring your beds in length.

A 6-inch board on each side, when nailed against the bottom, allowing an inch for nailing, will make the bed five inches deep, inside measurement. Fill the beds scant full of soil, so that when planted and watered it will settle down to four inches or a trifle less.

You will do well to buy more than six or eight varieties to start with, because you will want more than that many, even of those that thrive for you, and until you find out what varieties will do best for you, you had better get more varieties and less of each kind. In white, try Queen Louise, Flora Hill, Boston Market, The Belle, Lady Bountiful, The Queen, White Lawson, Vesper and Indiana Market. In pink, try Mrs. Lawson, Mrs. Nelson, Floriana, Indianapolis, Enchantress and Beatrice. In scarlet, try G. H. Crane, Estelle, Flamingo, Flambeau, Cardinal and Richmond Gem. Here are twenty-one varieties, any of which may be just what you want, and I would add Harlowarden as a crimson. You will have to try the newer varieties for yourself as they are sent out. A variety that does fine for your neighbor may not be satisfactory on your place at all.

A. F. J. BAUR.

STEM-ROT AGAIN.

Will you please let me know what is the cause of stem-rot in carnations? I am only in the business a year, in the south, but was successful with them in the north. The soil is heavy, mixed with bone meal and wood ashes and one load of manure to three of soil. I spread the roots out and planted about an inch and a half deep and nine to ten inches apart each way. I watered heavily after planting and shaded them for three weeks.

J. T. F.

This disease has caused many a gray hair to appear on the heads of old and experienced growers and it is one of the worst diseases to handle that we have in carnations. Our scientists have told us that it is caused by a fungous growth called Fusarium and another called Rhizoctonia. The first is a dry rot, the latter a wet rot. The latter is far the more common and when we speak of stem-rot it is usually the Rhizoctonia we have in mind. The spores of this disease are supposed to be present in greater or less degree in most soils where there is much decaying matter, such as stable manure, etc. These spores, as long as they are dry, will remain in a dormant condition, but moisture will start them into activity. That is why so servation and some little experience to catch them just at the proper stage. Though as a general rule ripeness is indicated by the sori turning brown or beginning to shake off, some of the genera, notably the davallias, shake their spores much more readily than others, and the inexperienced are often apt to delay too long and gather, instead of ripe spores, fronds with but empty cells. The fronds when gathered should be wrapped closely in paper and laid in a dry, warm place for a week or two until thoroughly dry, after which the spores can be readily shaken off. The general opinion is that the sooner they are sown after being thoroughly ripened the better, but although not usually necessary or practical to keep them for any length of time, I have sown spores of Pteris tremula that had been wrapped up in paper for two years with satisfactory results.

Another somewhat difficult matter is to procure spores of the individual varieties true or unmixed. Fern spores are of such a light nature that the least breath of air will carry them all over the house, the spores of one variety finding lodgment on the fronds of another. I have sown spores from Adiantum fronds and reaped, instead of Adiantum, an excellent crop of Pteris, where the spores had got mixed in this way; the Adiantum spores were there, but the Pteris, being the stronger growing and quicker germinating variety, it was simply a case of the survival of the fittest. The lesson thus learned is to keep the varieties by themselves and as far away from others as possible for some time previous to the selection of spore fronds.

Preparing Seed Pans.

The next thing is the preparation of the seed pans. These should be thoroughly cleaned to insure that no germs of moss or fungus are left. A great deal of what is known as damping-off has its origin from this source, being the work of a minute fungus. Fill the pans about one-third full with crocks, larger ones in the bottom and those on the top finely broken; over this place a layer of moss, then fill to within an inch and a half of the top with ordinary potting soil. Over this place half an inch of soil which has been subjected to a baking process long enough to kill all vegetation in it. This insures against the growth of moss, which in unbaked soil would be more rapid than that of the ferns and prove a source of considerable trouble. This baking of the soil was at one time one of the secrets of fern cultivation, but it is now pretty generally practiced.

The surface soil in the pan should be pressed down and made as smooth as possible. A good soaking of water should be given and allowed to drain off before sowing the spores. Sow these thinly, I may say, very thinly. The spores being very minute, it is an easy matter to sow too thickly without being aware of it. Don't cover the spores but place over the pan a close-fitting pane of glass. The glass must be turned frequently to prevent the moisture from dripping, which would throw the spores all into little bunches. Water must never be given from the top, but the pan should be set in a saucer, which should always be kept full and from which sufficient moisture will be drawn.

The best place to start the spores is in a close atmosphere, in a bottom heat of from 60 to 65 degrees. Shade should be provided during the day, but should be removed when the sun is not shining directly on the house. In from ten days to three weeks, according to the variety, the surface of the pan will assume a green, mossy appearance.

Transplanting.

If the spores have been thinly sown it may not be necessary to transplant until they begin to throw up the little fronds, though they generally require transplanting before that stage is reached. For this transplanting shallow flats are the most suitable, a loose, sandy compost being provided. They should be lifted in small bunches on a wooden label, which has been rounded and thinned down on one end for the purpose. The back of the label is pressed down into the soil sufficiently to make a little hollow receptacle and, when withdrawn from below, leaves the little clumps in proper position without having to be touched by hand. They being of a very fragile nature, the least touch will bruise them.

Some don't believe in watering at this stage, but I make it a practice to sprinkle them lightly after transplanting and find no bad results from it. I always, however, use water at a temperature of about 65 degrees. Covering with glass will be necessary for some time after transplanting, but this should be gradually removed as the little fronds gather strength. Shading must be strictly attended to through all this stage of their growth, as a few minutes sunshine would work irreparable damage. They must also never be allowed to suffer from dryness.

When the plants begin to get crowded they should be potted up into thumb pots, using a compost of loam, leaf-mold and sand in about equal portions. The plants need not be singled out individually, but if potted four or five together will make serviceable plants much quicker. For subsequent pottings (which should be given just as soon as the pots they are in are well filled with roots) a rather heavier, moderately enriched soil should be employed.

Ferneries Ever Popular.

Raising from spores is by far the most convenient way of keeping up a supply of small ferns, the demand for which seems to be rapidly on the increase, they being extensively employed for filling fern pans, small vases, etc., for house decoration. The demand for certain classes of plants or flowers is apt to be controlled to a greater or less extent by fads or fashion, but the fern pan seems to me to be one of those things that are not going to be lightly cast aside, for when my lady buys a nice pan of ferns she knows that she has something that is going to last, and look good for quite a while, whereas she can spend as much money for a bunch of flowers which tomorrow is cast into the ash barrel. So to maintain my lady's interest the chief consideration in the selection of varieties should be their standing qualities. This, combined with gracefulness of frond and compactness of habit, gives an ideal fern for the purpose in hand. Stiff, heavy-leaved varieties should be avoided.

If I were to enumerate all the varieties suitable for the purpose I have no doubt they would fill a good-size book. But I am sorry to say that the varieties generally met with are not very numerous; a few seem to be run on and few of the growers seem to make a break to get away from the old rut. I am sure it would pay the grower who would have enterprise enough to keep on procuring and trying varieties different from what are commonly used. They need not be new varieties, for there are hundreds of old ones to pick from which are worthy of a trial.

Larger Plants.

About six months from time of sowing is usually required to give useful ble, and if it is intended to grow them into specimens they should be kept moving just as fast as possible, as the size of plant does not depend so much on age or size of crown as it does on length of frond, and to procure this the chief agencies are intensive culture and quick growth.

Most ferns can be materially assisted by the application of liquid manures, but these should not be applied unless the pots are pretty well filled with roots; otherwise the residue not utilized by the plants would have a tendency to clog the soil and cause sourness.

Propagating by Division.

Most ferns adapt themselves to propagation by division, but this is a slow method with some, and when they come readily from spores need hardly be practiced. Some, however, notably the nephrolepis, can be propagated very rapidly by offsets, and some, notably Adiantum Farleyense, can only be propagated by divisions of the crown. This latter variety is one of the most beautiful ferns we have, though one that is rather difficult to grow. One of the chief causes of failure with this variety is the lack of heat in winter. It requires a tem-and in a good many cases spoils the individual character of the fronds from lack of proper development. All that is necessary in applying shade is to prevent the strong sunlight from burning or eating the color out of the fronds. Further than to prevent this, shade is unnecessary.

Fresh air also plays an important part in maintaining the health of the plants. Although a dry atmosphere is not congenial to their well-being, nevertheless fresh air is necessary to maintain the strength of growth. When fire heat is being used more atmospheric moisture is needed and can safely be given by frequent sprinkling of the pathways and under the benches of the house. But, as soon as firing is discontinued, the atmosphere of the house naturally becomes charged with moisture, and it is then necessary to keep air on both night and day to prevent condensation. When condensed moisture settles on the fronds it is sure to cause damping, especially to the younger and more tender ones, and when damaged by damp in their earlier stages they never develop their true character.

Hardy Ferns.

In conclusion I would like to say a few words in favor of the more general use of hardy ferns for beautifying the surroundings of the home. These adapt themselves to filling corners where few other plants will thrive, and we have a great many beautiful native varieties, besides a number of foreign varieties, that are quite hardy in this latitude. They will grow and thrive in any shady corner as long as they are not under the dense shade and drip of trees. Many a corner that is now an eye-sore could be made beautiful by the erection of a rockery and the judicious use of hardy ferns. The expense would be a small item, as stones are not hard to procure and the rougher they are thrown together the better they will look. The crevices can be filled in with any good ordinary soil and plants gathered from the woods to start with, though a knowledge of the growth of the different varieties is necessary to know where to plant them so that the larger growers won't hide the smaller. Once the rockery is established the collection of finer varieties can begin. When something more choice is procured some of the commoner ones can be pulled out and then by degrees a collection of the choicest kinds can be got together.

GIRARD COLLEGE.

The most progressive paper takes pleasure in giving its readers a brief outline of the planting at Girard College this season, under the management of Edwin Lonsdale. The principal beds lie between the south gate and the main building. They were gay with tulips, pansies and daisies early in April and May. These were gradually replaced by geraniums, coleus, alternantheras and crotons until the work was completed by the middle of June. The effect is now very fine.

The beds are laid out on turf, a broad central walk dividing them into two practically corresponding halves. To the right and left of this dividing walk stretch long beds of La Favorite geraniums, white, edged with Achyranthes Lindenii and an artemisia resembling stellaria, the idea being to bring out the college colors of garnet and steel. These size plants in a night temperature of about 60 degrees and a day temperature of 75 degrees. In stronger heat they could be grown in shorter time, but it does not pay to rush them, as they would not be so compact and bushy and would, of course, be much softer.

Successional batches should be sown as required, as they soon become too large, and if confined for any length of time in small pots they assume a stunted and sickly appearance.

Where larger plants are wanted they should be kept moved up as they need it and receive as little check as possi-perature of not less than 65 degrees to keep it growing even slowly. If subjected to a lower temperature than this the plants become stunted and it is next to impossible to get them back into a healthy condition, even with the higher temperature of summer, without breaking them up and beginning all over again.

Shade and Moisture.

All ferns require shade to a greater or less extent, but it is a very common mistake to have the shade too heavy. This causes drawn up, weakly growth, beds are enclosed by a narrow band of grass and then by a band of coleus in solid colors, Verschaffeltii on the sides, Golden Bedder on the ends.

To the right and left of these linear beds are two large circular beds raised a little from the grass level, each surrounded by nine smaller but very good-size round beds. The large beds are twenty-eight feet in circumference, laid out to represent a single dahlia flower. The center is a Musa ensate, then a circle of Arundo Donax, then a circle of Canna Black Beauty surrounded by Pennisetum longistylum. From the pennisetum the petals of the dahlias are laid out in scarlet, green-gold and dark alternanthera, the varieties used being brilliantissima, aurea nana and Prospect Park. The ground work is eeheverias, secunda in one and secunda glauca edged by a single variety of alternanthera, one scarlet, the other dark, relieved by a double row of crassus.

The surrounding beds were laid out in solid effects of geraniums and crotons alternately, each with its border. The geraniums were S. A. Nutt, double crimson; Dennison's Seedling, scarlet; Dryden, pink, both single and double. The crotons were Fasciatum, which was most beautifully colored; Queen Victoria and Baronne de Rothschild, both very fine. The edgings for the former were Abutilon Savitzii, very effective, and a duranta (never mind its last name, I don't want to get mixed up in a controversy) and for the latter Eranthemum epurum (atrosanguineum?) and the afore-said artemisia used together. The abutilon and duranta were used in different beds. The whole effect, flowers, foliage, turf and stately buildings beyond was very handsome. A bed of mixed crotons further on was effective, also a bed of cacti and eeheverias.

Mr. Lonsdale has plans which, should they bear fruit, will lead to a school for horticulture in Girard College that would be of benefit to the boys and to our calling. May he prosper. PHIL.

W. J. BARNES.

Starting into business in 1890 with a lean-to costing $45 and an unlimited amount of grit, with a trade that was confined to bedding plants, W. J. Barnes, of Kansas City, made such a success of his venture that one year later he built 2,500 feet of glass and commenced growing cut flowers. The part of the city he picked out as a business point happily met his fullest expectations and buildings began to grow up around him, and his business growing in proportion, so that in 1894 he increased his place to 10,000 feet. Three years ago he tore down his old range and replaced it with 12,000 feet of up-to-date greenhouses.

He has three houses in Beauty, Richmond, Bride and Maid. Four houses are in carnations. The varieties grown are Cardinal, Enchantress, Lawson, Nelson Fisher and Boston Market. There is one house of mums in pots and one of benched stock; one palm house and a house of splendid specimen plants of Pieroni elegantissima and Bostoniensis ferns. In addition to this Mr. Barnes has about 500 square feet of the finest asters.

Commencing as he did, in a very small way, Mr. Barnes has kept abreast of the times, educating the people to distinguish between what is really of value and what is worthless, until today he stands among the best and is reaping the harvest he has sown, but only by patient, conscientious labor and honest dealings.

Mr. Barnes stands upon the left of the accompanying illustration and his grower, Al Murray, who is a factor in the success of the business, upon the right. NARCISSUS.

HAIL ASSOCIATION.

The following amendments to the by-laws of the Florists' Hail Association of America were recommended by the directors of that body at a meeting held in Washington, D. C. These amendments will be voted on by the members of the association at Dayton, O., in August, 1906:

Article V., Section VII.—Any risk upon which three or more consecutive losses shall have been paid in the five years preceding the levying of an assessment, shall be considered a hazardous risk for that assessment and an additional ten per cent of the gross amount of such assessment shall be added thereto.

Article V., Section VIII.—Any risk upon which three or more consecutive losses shall have been paid in the twelve months preceding the levying of an assessment, shall be considered an extra hazardous risk for that assessment and an additional twenty-five per cent of the gross amount of such assessment shall be added thereto.

TOLEDO IS IN LINE.

On the evening of August 10 a few of the florists of Toledo got together and decided that it would be for the interests of the trade to start a florists' club. They therefore agreed to meet again in two weeks, and in the meantime to make an effort to interest others in the project, with the result that about twenty-five of the florists of the city met August 24, and proceeded to organize what is to be known as the Toledo Florists' Club.

After electing Geo. Bayer as president for one year, E. H. Cushman, of Sylvania, as vice-president, and S. N. Peck, secretary and treasurer, they adopted suitable by-laws and the work of organization was completed.

Toledo now takes her place with the other progressive cities in the work of advancing the interests of horticulture. As our city already has the reputation of being one of the finest convention cities in the land, who knows but we may be able to offer sufficient inducements in the near future to persuade the S. A. F. to visit us? And if so we know they will not go away dissatisfied.

Any person having anything to offer that would be of interest to our society can address S. N. Peck, secretary, 1707 Broadway, Toledo, O., and the same will be presented for the club's consideration. S. N. P.

THE READERS' CORNER.

The White Fly.

For the benefit of "Hoosier," who inquires for information about this pest, I can say that we have tried to exterminate it with hydrocyanic acid gas, and have probably been as successful with this method as others are; but, while it kills nearly all the mature insects, it is dangerous and expensive, and does not kill the eggs; and soon there is another horde to destroy; and if the gas is strong enough to kill the fly, it is likely to injure the foliage of some of the plants.

If "Hoosier" will make a strong soap suds, using any good laundry soap for the purpose, and syringe the infested plants with it, using force enough to knock the plants over if necessary, he will destroy most of the insects, and by repeating the treatment once or twice, he can soon eradicate them; and this without danger, and at little cost.

LARVAE OF MAY BEETLE.

I am greatly in trouble with a white grub and feel that you can tell me how to get rid of it. I have a large strawberry bed which I dressed heavily with horse manure. Now the plants are all dying off, so I dug into some hills and found white grubs, such as grow in sods. Will ashes of hard wood spread on the ground have any effect on the grubs, or is there anything that will? I am having bad luck with melons; they die off rapidly but there are no grubs.

J. H. W.

The grubs complained of are no doubt the larvæ of the May beetle. Under circumstances like these it is a hard thing to get rid of. The female beetle lays its eggs in the soil three or four inches below the surface, usually selecting a place where the young won't have far to go for food. One female is said to lay nearly 100 eggs at a time. It takes the eggs about fifteen days to hatch, after which they soon begin to scatter around and feed on the roots of whatever plants are nearest. The grub is soft and not hard to kill if it can be reached, but the trouble is to reach it and not injure the plants it is working on.

A dressing of lime will kill them, or watering the soil with a solution of nitrate of soda at the rate of one ounce of soda to five gallons of water; or the nitrate of soda could be sown on the ground at the rate of 250 pounds to the acre. This would also be good for your strawberries, but seeing that they have just had a heavy dressing of manure probably the lime would be the better in your case; about fifty bushels to the acre ought to do the work. This should be spread evenly over the surface of the ground and well around the plants and hoed in well. This will destroy all the grubs, it reaches but of course under the crowns of the plants it would not be possible to reach them with anything strong enough to kill without injury to the plants.

Your melons are likely attacked by a fungous disease for which, so far as I know, there has been no practical remedy found. The season has a good deal to do with it. Dry weather and heavy night dews are congenial to the spread of the disease. The dews leave just enough moisture on the leaves of the melon to insure the development of the spores. Rains would wash the spores off the foliage into the soil, where they could not develop. Last year in most localities there was very little trouble from this disease because the season was unfavorable to its development, but for the three preceding years the disease was very destructive and this year it seems to be again general. If the plants could be covered over to keep the dews off them I have no doubt the disease could be averted, but until some cheap and easy means of covering can be devised the crop would not pay for the trouble.

MATERIAL FOR MUSHROOM BEDS.

It is a great advantage to the mushroom grower if he is so placed that he can procure a plentiful supply of fresh horse manure, so that he can get enough material within the space of three or four days to make up a bed. Where the supply is limited it is a case of collecting little by little and keeping it turned over and over to prevent violent heating, and even with the utmost care a good deal of the more valuable properties of the manure are lost through evaporation and the manure is often rendered too dry for best results.

Even though the manure can be had all at one time it is necessary to keep turning it for a few days to prevent burning, until the most violent of the heat is spent. If soil is added to it at the rate of one load of soil to five of manure it will assist considerably in the cooling down of the manure and save a good deal of labor in turning, getting the mixture in a fit state for making up the bed in a great deal shorter time. A good, friable loam that can be finely broken up is the best to use, and it should be in about a medium state of moisture, neither too wet nor too dry, but just in that condition that it will readily absorb ammonia from the manure. The retention of this ammonia by the soil lends to the mixture considerable lasting properties not present when manure alone is used.

Considerable diversity of opinion exists regarding the advantage or disadvantage of the presence of litter in the mixture. Our own experience is that there is no need of being too tight-laced about the matter. The chief disadvantage of its presence in quantity is that it prevents the proper firming of the bed, but when soil is used the danger of this is pretty well overbalanced, as when soil is present in the mixture it packs much more easily.

There can be no hard and fast rule laid down regarding the exact condition in which the material is most suitable for making up the bed, as weather conditions and the amount of moisture in the material itself have a good deal to do with the heating properties of the mixture. Experience alone must be the teacher. After the bed is made up it should develop a heat of from 105 to 110 degrees, so by taking this as a guide and watching the temperature of the bed the operator will soon come to learn the best condition in which to use his material. If it fails to rise to this, make up a little sooner; should it exceed, wait a little longer.

FLORICULTURE IN THE SOUTH.

[A paper by R. Nicholson, Dallas, Tex., read before the Society of American Florists at Washington, August 17, 1905.]

I have been asked to write a paper entitled "Helps to Floriculture in the South and Southwest." This is my first attempt in this line and I feel sure that a great many of those assembled here today would be much better able than I to do the subject justice. However, I will do the best I can and hope that the information I have gained from experience will be of some benefit.

I will give you the methods which we have found the most successful in the growing of a few plants in the south.

The Pansy.

When I came to Texas, about fifteen years ago, pansy seed used to be sown in the spring and by the time the plants were large enough to set out the weather was so warm they did not do anything. Now we find the best time to sow pansy seed is in September. The seed is sown in frames covered with lath sash. It is a good idea also to lay old sacks or burlap over the beds, to hold the moisture till the seed germinates, for it is usually very warm in the south in September.

After the seed germinates, the sacks can be gradually removed. The lath sash are left on, however, till the plants have a good start. We then transplant to other frames, in good, rich soil, where they stay all winter, without any protection whatever, although we often have very cold weather, 15 to 20 degrees and over of frost being very common, besides very cold north winds.

I planted a bed of pansies last December where they were to bloom, and they stood all the cold winter and bloomed better in the spring than any I had ever handled before, which I attributed to the plants being small when planted; they made root all the winter and when warm weather set in they were ready to put their strength into flowers, instead of having to try to both bloom and grow, as when they are planted in the spring.

Pansies bloom here in February, March, April and May, depending on the season. They can be followed with geraniums, hibiscus, salvias, verbenas, plumbagos, petunias and lantanas, all of which will bloom till frost cuts them down.

Sweet Peas.

Sweet peas used to be planted here in the spring, like pansies, and by the time they were growing well the hot weather set in and burned them up. People used to say, "It is no use to try to grow sweet peas in Texas." Now, however, we have learned differently and grow as fine sweet peas as anywhere.

The best time to plant in this part of the south is in December or January, some people planting in November. The ground should be well prepared and forked deep before sowing. Sweet peas stand a great deal of cold weather. They begin blooming here about May and last until June. The weather then being very warm, the red spider gets on the vines and they soon die. We have tried several of the dwarf varieties but have had very poor success with them.

Hibiscus and Plumbagos.

Hibiscus is one of the best plants for the south, as the hotter the weather the better they like it. We find that we have best success propagating hibiscus in July and August, the cuttings being just right at that time.

The plumbago is another plant that does exceedingly well in the south, as it blooms best during the very hot weather and makes a beautiful show. Plumbago capensis is the best. We propagate them in summer also. When we get ready to propagate, we cut all the blooms off the plants, and as soon as the young shoots are large enough we use them for cuttings and usually have very good success. We try to get a heel on the cutting when possible. We root lemon ver-bona about the same time and in the same way. They make fine growth here in the south, and are highly prized for their delightful odor.

Cannas and Other Bedders.

Cannas grow beautifully in the south and are almost hardy here. They require no protection, unless it should happen to be a very severe winter, when a little mulching is all that is necessary to protect them.

Dahlias do only fairly well, the climate being too hot for them. Gladioli do fairly well. Lantanas are like hibiscus and plumbagos, as they enjoy the hot sun and bloom all summer. Bananas grow finely here. A bed with a banana in the middle surrounded with caladiums or cannas makes a rich tropical effect. Salvias make a beautiful display and stand the sun well. Verbenas stand the climate to perfection and bloom all summer and sometimes go through the winter.

Geraniums are very popular in the south as everywhere else. A great many varieties, however, will not stand the hot sun and have to be shaded. The varieties I have noticed that seem to stand our climate best are Spaulding's Pet, A. Ricard, Heteranthe, Single Grant, La Favorite, Jean Viaud, Lizzie Hamilton, Mrs. E. G. Hill, Castellane and Jacquerie, the latter being one of the most beautiful dark crimson geraniums we know of.

Various Plants.

Clematis Jackmani and C. paniculata grow and bloom well here. Violets begin to bloom in January and continue up to about the end of March. The single are the only kind that do well, but they are fine.

Poppies, dianthus, phlox and cornflower seed can be sown in the fall here. They then bloom very early in the spring. Balsam, cockscomb, larkspur, nasturtiums, petunias and vincas do well here and will bloom all the summer, from seed sown in the spring.

We have had for several years quite a demand for hardy plants that do not have to be replanted every season, so we tried a great many kinds and find that the following list do well here and seem to stand our climate: Achillea The Pearl, bocconias, peonies, helianthus, hollyhocks, perennial phlox, platycodon, rudbeckia, Stokesia cyanea, tritomas, Pyrethrum uliginosum and Shasta daisy. We have a number of other varieties planted for trial.

Bulbs.

Hyacinths do best planted in December, as when planted earlier they sometimes grow too fast and get the tops killed. Tulips do only fairly well. Narcissi of all kinds do first-class. A Frenchman by the name of Revershon, who lives near Dallas, has about a quarter of an acre planted in bulbs, some of them having been planted twenty years ago. And he grows as fine hyacinths, narcissi, etc., as I have ever seen grown from imported bulbs. Bulbs are growing several hundred feet away from the field, where the seed has washed with the rains. This goes to show that the land is well adapted to the raising of bulbs.

Chrysanthemums.

We grow as fine chrysanthemums in the south as are grown anywhere. In the southern part of Texas they are grown entirely outdoors. Some growers cover their beds with cloth during the blooming period, to protect the flowers from the weather.

At Waco, Tex., in the central part of the state, they hold a show every fall, and if some of our northern florists were to see the mums they grow there, they would be surprised. In this section of the state mums are planted in beds outdoors, and, during the blooming period, they build a cheap framework over the beds, which they cover with cloth to protect the flowers from the weather. No artificial heat is used.

In northern Texas, the weather being colder in the fall and winter, we plant on benches under glass for single stems. We also plant in solid beds, taking the sash off the houses during the hot weather. The plants that we grow in solid beds we give from three to five stems and get very good-size flowers which sell to good advantage.

As soon as the weather begins to get a little cool and the buds begin to show color, we put the sash on, giving abundance of air all day and using a little heat at night if the weather happens to get cold. Outdoors they bloom very nicely in the late fall provided we do not have an early frost. People in town cover them at night when there is any prospect of a frost, and in this way prolong the blooming period.

Cut mums sell here at from $2 to $5 per dozen. Oklahoma grows good mums also, in about the same way as we grow in northern Texas.

Roses.

The south is famed as being the land of roses. Tea and hybrid tea are the kinds that are grown mostly here. They are all perfectly hardy with the exception of a few varieties, such as Perle, Sunset, etc. These sometimes get winter-killed when very young in this way: During the hot weather the roses do not grow very much and in the fall when the weather is cool, they put on a young, tender growth and bloom freely. When in this condition we sometimes get an early frost, about the latter part of October, which weakens them and they then die during the cold weather in the winter.

I consider the hybrid tea as being by far the best type of rose for the south, being more hardy than the tea, and first-class bloomers. We grow Kaiserin outdoors for a white rose for cut flowers and have never seen anything yet that would compare with it. Bride and Bridesmaid do very well, also a great many other kinds that are grown for show only.

Meteor mildews easily and is only good in very hot weather. La France grows to perfection. American Beauty is the best rose of its kind for outdoors, as it blooms continuously from April until winter sets in. It is a very profitable rose to grow. Gruss an Tepitz has a very rich color and is fine for massing outdoors. It comes almost single, but the color is perfect. Hybrid perpetuals are not grown very much. Paul Neyron and Mrs. John Laing do well.

I planted 3,000 roses in my back yard a year ago, as I wanted to have the prettiest back yard on the street. I planted 1,000 Kaiserins, 1,000 Beauties, 500 La France and 500 Meteor, Bride, Bridesmaid, etc. I cultivated and manured the ground well and had fine roses up till frost. I then pruned them back to within six inches of the ground and mulched them heavily with well-rotted manure.

This spring when they started to grow, I disbudded the Kaiserins and Beauties, and at Easter I cut as fine Kaiserins with two to three-foot stems as I have ever seen grown under glass, and the flowers were solid and of fine color and had perfect foliage. I cut from 500 to 1,000 fine roses every day for several weeks, and my back yard was the admiration of the neighborhood. I like the Kaiserin best for an all-round rose, Beauty next.

Roses are not much grown under glass in Texas, but it is only a question of time till we grow all the roses we require during the winter months, as they can be grown here just as well as in the north.

Carnations.

Carnations grow well in the south and if anything are more popular than roses. We grow all the standard varieties. They are treated practically the same as in the north. We plant them in the field in April and bench them in August and September. Oklahoma is growing very good carnations and the florists there sell all their surplus in Texas.

The reason carnations are grown here more than roses is because they do not ship long distances as well as roses, so we buy our roses in Chicago at present. A good many carnations are still being shipped to the south, but it will not be long before the south will produce all it requires and have a surplus.

What we need in Texas mostly now is a few first-class greenhouse establishments to grow cut flowers on a large scale for the retailers. The south is coming to the front very rapidly, especially Texas. The demand for choice cut flowers is increasing wonderfully, and people here demand the best flowers that can be had and are just as hard to please as people in the larger cities in the north. Our people are also willing to pay a fair price for a good article.

Texas at present buys a great many cut flowers during the winter, and Chicago is the principal market from which we draw our supply. However, new establishments are being started from time to time and it will not be long till Texas will be shipping flowers to other states. Roses will also be grown here in the winter after a while, as soon as we get some larger establishments started. A company has just been organized here with a capital of $250,000 to engage in the nursery and florist business. They intend putting up a large range of houses, so we hope we will soon be able to get all the flowers we want in the winter at home.

ROSE J. B. CLARK.

The rose novelty of the day in England is a hybrid tea named J. B. Clark. The flowers are of large size, cup-shaped, with very broad rich scarlet petals of good texture and velvety in appearance. It secured the silver medal of the National Rose Society as the best hybrid tea in the nurserymen's class when shown by Hugh Dickson, Royal Nurseries, Belfast. There can be no question that it is a grand acquisition to the hybrid tea class, and removes the stigma that hybrid tea roses were entirely confined to pale varieties. J. B. Clark has a much larger bloom than Liberty, and is equally as fine, if not a better color, so that this rose is bound to take a prominent position.

BOSTON.The Market.

We have had a good deal of rainy and cloudy weather of late and the quantity of stock coming in has cleared out quite well. Roses are more abundant. Brides and Maids of the new crop are plentiful, selling at from $1 to $2, best grade fetching $4 to $5. The best Kaiserins still make up to $8. Beauties are improving, but many seen are of poor color. Liberties are rather scarce just now. Carnations are in very short supply, many telephone orders at the markets and wholesale houses having to be declined. The best flowers are grown outdoors. Prices vary from $1.50 to $3.

Asters are abundant, the white and light pink shades selling the best, red and magenta shades being hardest to move. Some extra fine flowers have made $2, the general run going at from 35 cents to 75 cents. Gladioli remain about the same. Asparagus and adiantum are more abundant.

Various Notes.

H. M. Robinson & Co. report business in their class of goods as excellent. They are now booking orders for a new crop of southern smilax.

Patrick Welch returned September 7 from his vacation at Old Orchard Beach, Me., in fine trim for the coming busy season.

Farquhar & Co. report an exceptionally heavy inquiry and demand for all the more popular Dutch bulbs.

H. T. Capers will handle pot plants for W. T. Walke, of Salem, the coming season at the Park street flower market.

Although there was no prize exhibition at Horticultural hall on September 2, A. L. Johnson and W. G. Winsor made fine displays of dahlias. These flowers continue to increase in popularity here. The Mycological Club had a capital show of fungi.

Welch Bros. are getting ready for the fall season. The employees are about all back from vacations, ready for the coming rush. They report asters and roses as plentiful, but carnations very scarce. American Beauties from Carl Jurgens, Newport, R. I., are excellent for the season.

A number of local horticulturists have been invited to visit the New Hampshire Experimental Station at Durham, September 12, to inspect the work being done and the many interesting horticultural features at this institution.

James Farquhar returned from Porto Rico August 31. He likes the Porto Rican climate and states that bulbs are doing well in their nursery there.

Numerous entries are coming in for the big fall show at Horticultural hall, which opens on September 14. The dahlia display promises to beat all records.

While sweet peas are practically over here now, on the North Shore estates they are still flowering finely and at Bar Harbor, Me., are a sheet of bloom.

The auction sale of stalls at the Music hall market by the Boston Co-operative Flower Market took place on August 30. Stalls to the number of seventy-eight were disposed of, F. Simpson, of Woburn, paying top price, $82. Albert Roper and several others paid $75. Including stalls disposed of previous to and after the auction, the number sold aggregates ninety-four, with a total premium of about $3,500.

A call on Duncan Finlayson at Larz Anderson's fine estate in Brookline, the past week, showed everything to be in fine shape. Carnations grown this season are Fiancee, Lawson, White Lawson, Chester Roper, Fair Maid, Queen and Enchantress. These looked splendid. A bench of Richmond in one of the rose divisions looked vigorous. Chrysanthemums, both in pots and as single stems in boxes, were looking well. In a corridor house tuberous begonias and achimenes were making a gorgeous show. Cœlogynes, Lælia anceps, Cattleya labiata, calanthes and other orchids were very promising. Three divisions are devoted to grapes. One had been cleared but in the remaining two there was a fine crop of finely finished fruit, bunches and berries large. Varieties noted were Muscat of Alexandria, Diamond Jubilee (rated low here), Appley Towers, Lady Downe's, Barbarossa, Black Hamburg, Gros Maré, Gros Colman and Black Alicante. The fine Italian garden, the best type of this class of gardening in America, was very attractive with a variety of annuals and perennials. Two large beds of Nicotiana Sanderæ in a shaded position looked better than any we had yet seen. In the open it was worthless. The multiplicity of colors, some of bad shade, spoils to some extent the effect. As a general rule this novelty is condemned in this section. On the walls of the kitchen garden peaches were carrying splendid crops. These are all English varieties and are never protected.

In the Boston Public Gardens some thousands of Lilium speciosum album and L. Melpomene are making a fine show at present. Rose Kaiserin Augusta Victoria fills several beds and is covered with blooms. The croton beds are better than for several years. Nicotiana Sanderæ can hardly be called a success.

At the new Bristol county fair, which opened in Taunton on September 4, there was a grand display of plants and flowers. Dahlias were shown in thousands by such prominent growers as H. F. Burt, G. D. Cooke, W. G. Winsor, J. K. Alexander, G. H. Walker, Clothier Pierce and other specialists. The largest and best of five displays of pot plants came from J. O. Christenson, gardener to W. J. Clemson. A. T. Story & Co. and the Dighton Nursery Co. had large collections of ornamental shrubs and tea roses in pots. Hand bouquets, centerpiecees and baskets were more numerous shown than ever before.

George Cartwright is now acting as salesman for H. H. Rogers, of Sudbury, a prominent grower of carnations and other flowers for the Park street market.

In conversation with a number of prominent Boston horticulturists in regard to the proposed S. A. F. exhibition in March, the general opinion has been that it would be bad policy to attempt such a show unless the rose and carnation societies were willing to hold their annual conventions and exhibitions at the same time. Boston has a big annual spring show each March and we think it extremely doubtful if such a one as projected would be the success hoped for here. New York would seem to have been the proper place to hold the show, seeing it had no other shows or conventions in the first quarter of 1906. S. A. F. officers and committeemen are announced to attend an early meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club to explain what is wanted.

We have made complaints on some occasions of a lack of rain during the present season. A good deal of the deficiency was made up on September 3 and 4 when a precipitation of from two and three-quarters to four inches of rain was recorded in this section. Outdoor flowers in most cases presented a sorry plight when the storm ceased. Not for many years had we such a Labor day deluge.

John McFarland is shipping quantities of extra fine lily of the valley to the new market.

Julius Roehrs and Thomas Knight, of Rutherford, N. J., have been visiting leading orchid collectors in and around Boston the past week. W. N. CRAIG.

PHILADELPHIA.The Market.

While business has been quiet locally, there has been a fair demand from out of town. Beauties, valley, asters and choice tea roses are most popular. Gladioli are marketed in large quantities. Dahlias are coming to the front, the better sorts being obtainable in larger quantities, a fact the buyers are beginning to appreciate. Indications point to an early improvement in business conditions.

New Conservatory in Fairmount Park.

Nearly everybody knows the old lecture room in the west end of Horticultural hall, where Prof. J. T. Rothrock used to delight select audiences with learned discourses on botany every Saturday afternoon during the summer months. The casual visitor would see a couple of lovely ladies, ardent admirers of the professor, arrange a bouquet of choice flowers on his desk, then the audience would assemble and listen in rapt attention while he expounded the genera and species and kindred lore to the accompanying rustle of palm-leaf fans and an occasional snore from a weak-kneed brother or sister.

Now the lecture room has gone and in its place is a lofty conservatory, just completed at a cost of $10,000. The conservatory is "L" shaped, about 45x75 feet, with glass roof and glass sides on the west and south. The large center bed, raised to a mound shape, pebble covered, is filled with various kinds of caeti, many of them recently received from Arizona, it was said. They are effectively arranged with shells. A wide side bench, running around the entire conservatory, is completely filled by Euphorbia Poinsettiana, twelve to eighteen inches high, in, I think, 6-inch pots. The whole presents a fine appearance and will prove of great interest to lovers of the cactus family.

A Glimpse in the Warehouse.

I wonder whether the florists all over the country who send "hurry" orders for this or that requisite, ever reflect on the amount of forethought and knowledge of their needs, combined with business enterprise, that make it possible for their demands to be met on short notice.

Every season the field must be carefully gone over, as by a general preparing for the march of an army. An increase in the use of this or that article, the falling off in the popularity of another, all must be carefully noted. Then the campaign must be mapped out. The factory must produce certain goods in given quantities. The local market must supply some, the foreign markets others. Then there are the novelties. Our florists are greedy for new things, but they must have merit. Care and judgment are required in their selection, and knowledge gained by long experience.

These qualities are strongly marked in Harry Bayersdorfer. Annually he fills the great warehouses of his firm with the world's products in florists' supplies which are annually distributed among the florists of this country. This process of filling starts about August 1 and goes steadily on until Decoration day, when there is a comparative lull, to take account of stock and breathe, as it were, for Bayersdorfer & Co. are tremendous workers and everyone, from the partners down to the newest helper, seems imbued with the spirit of work so necessary to success.

Through the kindness of Paul Berkowitz, the popular junior partner, I am able to give the REVIEW readers a few ideas on the goods already in the firm's big warehouses.

In "Toneware" vases Mr. Bayersdorfer has made a decided hit. This odd name denotes a sort of pottery deep green in color and of a variety of forms most attractive to the eye. Mr. Berkowitz' description of "antique Pompeian style" is fitting.

Among the many crepe papers, the flowered plaited occupy a leading place. They show many pretty color combinations that will harmonize with the popular plants.

Rainbow baskets are very pretty, suggesting possibilities in arrangements of crotons, autumn leaves, chrysanthemums, etc.

Copper pot holders are quaint little receptacles that might be used as a hanging basket, though intended for a single plant.

Soft green seaweed is being revived for shell decorations. It is graceful and full of charm.

The leaves on the branches of the copper beech are so cleverly prepared as to appear perfectly natural. They will be a great aid to the decorator, who must not make a dirt, also possessing the advantage of durability.

Mr. Berkowitz has promised that the REVIEW readers shall have another "glimpse in the warehouse" later.

Various Notes.

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving fine Beauties from Myers & Samtman.

Stephen B. Greene has accepted a position with H. Bayersdorfer & Co.

The flower market received, on Wednesday morning, September 6, the first cut of roses from the new John Burton place.

Berger Bros. are pleased with their new quarters at 1235-37 Filbert street. They have their ice-box in place and are putting the finishing touches on their other arrangements. May they prosper is the wish of their friends.

A pair of shapely bay trees mark the entrance to W. E. McKissick's. Inside the bright salesroom everything was in order on the opening day. A goodly number of consignors had sent in a nice lot of flowers. Local and out-of-town buyers were buying—they don't always do that, you know—and the genial proprietor was receiving callers. A cozy private office upstairs, and a rear entrance for express boxes on Cuthbert street, are especial conveniences.

William J. Baker personifies the old adage, "Duty first, pleasure afterwards." He is a great worker.

Eugene Bernheimer has returned from a week among the florists up Lancaster county.

M. Rice & Co. have engaged three new salesmen, one each for the city, the house and the road.

Miss Miles has taken charge of the Flower Market books during Miss Lathrop's absence on her holiday.

Some of the stores were closed part of Labor day. Hugh Graham gave his force a much-enjoyed half holiday.

A. Farenwald, of Hillside, has increased his planting of Liberties, cutting his Beauties down to one house. His stock is all planted in solid beds and looks very vigorous. Mr. Farenwald has a new rose on trial. You may smell and guess but not handle.

Watkis & Nicholson, of Hammonton, N. J., are encouraged by the outlook for the coming season.

Edward Towill, of Weldon, has added one house 90x150 feet planted with Liberties and has raised and broadened another. Mr. Towill's stock is in fine shape. He has 750 Richmond that are full of life. His two-year-old Beauties, cut back, are showing remarkable growth.

Joseph Heacock, of Wyneote, has one more house each of Beauties and Liberties this season.

A new sectional boiler is being installed at Horticultural hall in Fairmount park. It will heat the new cactus conservatories and also replace two other boilers to be taken out of commission.

J. F. Hunter, of Mount Holly, N. J., is thinking of moving to Collegeville, Pa.

The Ideal Salesman.

The REVIEW realizes that the position of a cut flower and plant salesman is one of importance to the grower, to the wholesaler, to the retailer and to the consumer. The REVIEW believes that a high standard among the salesmen will do much to promote the interests of all those who buy or sell cut flowers or plants, and to promote harmony among them. The REVIEW therefore proposes a prize essay competition similar to that held by the S. A. F. under the following conditions:

The subject of the essay shall be "The Ideal Salesman."

Each competitor shall mail his essay, unsigned, on or before September 30, 1905, to Phil, care of any of the wholesale cut flower houses in this city.

Each essay must be unsigned, accompanied by the writer's name and address in a sealed envelope. This envelope will not be opened until the awards have been made.

The essays and sealed envelopes will be numbered when received and the awards will be submitted to a competent judge. His awards will be announced in the Review of October 12.

The first prize will be $10, the second prize $5.

It is especially desired that the essays be clear, concise and to the point.

PHIL.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

William Copley, who is credited with having built the first greenhouses in this vicinity, died August 30 at his residence, 69 Floyd street, where he still carried on business in a small way. The deceased, who was 89 years old, was a great lover of flowers, and when quite young was a gardener on the estates of different wealthy men in Ireland, where he was born. He came to America in 1855 and started a greenhouse in a small way on Cripple Bush road, which is now Park avenue. He raised many new varieties of roses, and as his business increased he erected new greenhouses until he took in the entire block bounded by Nostrand, Park and Marcy avenues and Floyd street.

As building operations began about him he parted with the ground he occupied until only a small greenhouse remained, and this was retained more for his own pleasure. He was a widower, his wife having died twelve years ago. He was survived by two sons and two daughters.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Never did the flower trade in New York speed more gladly the parting guest than when it said good-by to August, a month that will go down in metropolitan floral records as "the worst ever." For low prices, abundance of stock and stagnation of business, wholesale and retail, it has never had an equal. The end of the week showed no improvement and Sunday and Labor day saw a premature equinoctial storm that was almost a flood.

Stock of all kinds is abundant, except orchids and carnations. Of roses, asters, gladioli and hydrangeas there is no end. The buyer is king and his dictum as to the value goes. An offer is snapped up more quickly than an old maid says "yes" when she knows her last chance has come. Oncidium varicosum is in evidence, excellent in quality and demand.

Various Notes.

Carl Jurgens, of Newport, is sending some fine valley to McManus.

John Young's windows were resplendent Saturday with cactus dahlias, grand stock from the headquarters at Cottage Gardens.

Gunther's additional room is for chrysanthemum display. But it will be large enough for about everything in the phenomenal season that all anticipate.

The Sigmund Geller Co. has added a neat office to its store on West Twenty-ninth street and has the facilities for a large business.

George Saltford is back from his stay at the old home amid the Rhinebeck violet factories, bronzed and healthy, looking much like the great Russian diplomat, Witte, and quite as diplomatic in his dealings with all classes.

Geo. Cotsonas & Co. have been receiving and putting in cold storage an immense quantity of ferns and other "green goods" for the winter demand and find their big store none too large this year for their increasing business.

Alex. Guttman moves to 43 West Twenty-eighth street on Saturday, September 9, where he will open his new wholesale store with appropriate celebration three weeks ahead of his first intention.

Kline & Starkey will take possession of Mr. Guttman's old premises, at 52 West Twenty-ninth street, the same day.

Thos. Young, Jr., opens his new wholesale store at 43 West Twenty-eighth street, occupying the whole floor above his old quarters, this week, and Phil Kessler also begins active business in his handsome place above Young & Nugent's.

Birthday celebrations are in order. J. K. Allen passed his fiftieth milestone on August 20 and Louis Schmutz went him ten better a few days later. Both are as lively as two-year-olds.

The club meeting Monday night promises a big attendance. It will be in the nature of a reunion after the three months' vacation. Mr. Nugent promises the needful articles with which to properly start the ship in motion. Pres. Traendly will take the helm for the closing months of his captaincy and will try to steer the ship into a peaceful harbor. John Birnie will probably discourse on the "Ideal Employer" from a practical standpoint and there will be eloquence on the convention and other topics sufficient to interest the most blase of the club's membership. The exhibit of herbaceous flowers should be a large and interesting one. There will be no bowling in the afternoon, but a new bowling club will soon be formed.

Wm. H. Donohoe left on Sunday for Saratoga, where he has charge of the decoration of the Grand Union Hotel for the carnival week. The entire effect is in red, Liberty roses, red dahlias and gladioli with an abundance of wild smilax being used profusely. Two men had been busy some days on the work before Mr. Donohoe's arrival.

Some large decorations are reported from Newport. Three weeks will about close the festivities there and by that time the metropolitan wheels will be in motion.

The schedule of prizes for the seventy-fourth annual fair of the American Institute is published. The veteran, Dr. F. M. Hexamer, is in charge. Medals, diplomas and certificates are numerous. The fair will last four days. A good many $100, $50, $40 and $30 prizes are listed, the total reaching into the thousands, and about everything in trade exhibits is enumerated.

One sign of fall that never fails is the opening of the auction rooms for the sale of horticultural goods and another week will see both Wm. Elliott & Son's and Cleary's Horticultural Hall in full blast. Next week Tuesday and Friday the melodious voices of the criers will be heard again, doubtless more melodious and persuasive than ever.

Bro. Gillett, of Cincinnati, drifted into town last week after a dip with his family in the brine at Ocean Grove and Asbury. He thinks it beats the Ohio for flavor, but the perfume of Anheuser is missing from the air. Mr. Gillett thinks Dayton an ideal spot for the convention.

Thos. Langton, of Brooklyn, has joined the rheumatic fraternity and, with Lorenz and Harry Bunyard, has had a hard fight with the enemy.

The wholesalers in Brooklyn are all hopeful as to the coming season. Crawbuck & Wiles have a great abundance of everything stored away in "green goods" and are reaching out for a shipping trade and getting ready for it. Their growth has been a rapid one and the need for just such a store in Brooklyn has been amply demonstrated.

Hicks & Crawbuck, the wholesale cut flower and supply men, will move to 76 Comb street, Brooklyn, next month, where they will have increased facilities for their business, with 6,000 square feet of floor space at their disposal.

A call on Thos. Devoy & Son, of Poughkeepsie, found the violet housing making rapid progress and the stock exceptionally fine. Telegraph geranium is especially brilliant, notwithstanding the storms and the early chill, and the demand for this great novelty continues. Some excellent stock is being shipped daily. Mr. Devoy, Sr., has been quite ill, but is again well and wonderfully active for a man in the seventies.

Mr. Saltford's fine place on the leading avenue of the city of Poughkeepsie never looked better, his bedding work being especially attractive. His extensive greenhouses, in which he grows about everything, are not capable of supplying half the stock demanded by his retail store, where his sons are in charge. One of the boys was rejoicing in the advent of his first born and the other was at the Thousand Islands on his wedding trip when I called.

Up at Hyde Park and toward Rhinebeck one hears little else but violets and every farmer has a house of them, or is going to have, and most of them are studying Geo. Saltford's handy little volume, "How to Grow Violets," or else have already mastered it. It was an enormous responsibility to write that book. One realizes it when he gets where the people use it more than the Bible in their family devotions.

The Japan Daily Herald, of Yokohama, printed in our own language, has a full page in its August 5 issue devoted to the Yokohama Nursery Co., with illustrations. The amount of land devoted to irises, lilies, sago palms, conifers and other nursery stock is very extensive. Mr. Suzuki places his exportations of lily bulbs last year at over four millions and of fern balls 150,000 and iris 100,000. Greenhouses have recently been added. Over 5,000 bales of sphagnum moss are used yearly for packing. Considerable space is devoted to the description of the wonderful dwarf trees, of which this firm sends many thousands yearly to America.

J. AUSTIN SHAW.

JUNCTION CITY, KAN.—An evidence of the growth of the people's appreciation of flowers is the increase in amount of glass in small towns. In 1898 the Junction City Floral Co. started with 1,000 square feet of glass. Now it has 12,000 feet. General greenhouse stock is found there but cut flowers are the principal stock; 4,000 carnations, 1,000 roses, 600 mums and a house of violets. They supply the local trade and neighboring towns.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The close of last week was very quiet, but cooler weather has brought a shortening in receipts and an awakening in business. Monday was Labor day and saw practically no city demand but shipping was fairly active and handled with great difficulty. The express companies suspended service, both in and out, on that day, and the wholesalers were compelled to go to the depot for incoming stock and with out-going shipments. The result was that a great many orders were cut more or less.

Though supplies have shortened, there continue to be good receipts of Beauties, both quality and quantity equal to most requirements. With tea roses the few days of cool weather has done something toward putting quality into the stock, but it is still difficult to dispose of the large proportion of shorts. Chatenay is showing considerable improvement. Liberty is fairly abundant and a few Richmond are seen.

There are enough carnations for all requirements and a considerable part of the stock is of fair quality. Some of the painstaking growers are cutting good stock in the fields in spite of the heavy rains. Other growers are beginning to bring in the first crop grown under glass, short of stem but fair in quality. White carnations have had the call.

There is no diminution in the receipts of asters. The good ones are bringing fair prices, but too many short, small and yellow-centered flowers are received and must be sold, if at all, at very low prices.

There are not so many Easter lilies and very few album and rubrum are seen now. Valley is one of the short items, prices ranging up to $5 per hundred. Gladioli are still abundant but not crowding the wholesalers the way they have for a month or six weeks past. Green stock of all kinds is abundant.

The wholesale houses are now open to 6 p. m.

The Summer Business.

The general report is that July and August were ahead of recent years. July was much better than usual with nearly all the houses and the same story is told of the first half of August, but the latter half was no better than usual. Several of the commission men report having made a little money this summer and others say they escaped without loss in July and August, something quite out of the ordinary. The prospects now are for a fine autumn business.

Poehlmann's Place.

The Poehlmann Bros. Co. is grading at Morton Grove and has given Geo. M. Garland an order for iron gutters for the early erection next spring of the largest addition they have ever put up in a single season. About twenty-five houses will be built, ranging from 300 to 500 feet in length. A large part of this addition is at what was the Adolph Poehlmann plant before the incorporation of the company.

Various Notes.

The growers who have stock in the field are all complaining of too much rain. We have had five inches more than normal this summer and the excess keeps right on growing.

They are very busy in the supply department at E. H. Hunt's, working nights to get out orders. A handsome new catalogue recently put in the mails is a considerable factor.

Wm. McKaig, formerly with the Geo. Wittbold Co., is now in the store of Weiland & Risch. This firm is handling some especially fine tuberose.

Kennicott Bros. Co. has just redecorated its store in anticipation of the busy fall season.

Johnson & Lundgren have bought out the old established business of McDougal & Neuman, 804 Milwaukee avenue. Mr. Johnson is of the firm of Johnson & Carlson. Mr. McDougal contemplates removing to California.

The Martin Grate Co. is installing a number of its rocking grates for growers north of town. After trying three of them for several months Peter Reinberg is putting in twelve more.

Sinner Bros. are cutting the last of their first crop of Harrisii from cold storage bulbs. The first made low prices but the last few weeks brought up the average. They plan a steady supply.

The three Poehlmann brothers and their wives were the rear guard of the returning conventionites. They reached home September 2, after visiting a number of pleasure places and many of the best growers in the east.

The Beach Amusement Co. will build a two-million-dollar amusement park at Harrison and Desplaines streets, in which gardening will play a more conspicuous part than in any other amusement park in America.

W. N. Rudd goes to Washington September 17 to attend the convention of the American Association of Cemetery Superintendents.

Among the week's visitors were: J. J. Hess, of Hess & Swoboda, Omaha; Gust. Frederickson, of St. Joe, Mich., who is just home from a trip to Europe and ready to buckle down to growing adiantum again; Otto Schwill, Jr., and wife, of the Idlewild Greenhouses, Memphis; J. A. Evans, Richmond, Ind.

OWENSBORO, KY.

Death of C. G. Nanz.

C. G. Nanz died of catarrh of the stomach at his residence here, on August 17. He had been ill for several months and for some time past his condition had been critical. He was well known and popular in Owensboro and other portions of the state where he had lived.

C. G. Nanz was born January 1, 1843, in Quedlinburg, Germany, and was educated in the same town, having gone to school every day in the year from the age of 6 until 14, with the exception of three weeks' vacation during that time.

At the age of 21 he was examined for military service and found deficient in size and weight. On February 20, 1865, he sailed for the United States. He landed in New York on the day Abraham Lincoln was assassinated.

On May 6, 1865, he came to Jeffersonville, thence to Louisville. On arriving in Louisville he boarded a car for his brother's and the conductor refused to take the 5 cents paper money he tendered for the fare, because it was Yankee money. He remained in Louisville for a number of years.

He removed to Bardstown, where he formed a partnership with William Selter and conducted a florist business. In the year of 1874 he was married to Frances Mattingly, of Bardstown. There are four living children, Benjamin D., Robert W., Katherine and Frances Grover.

All of Mr. Nanz's relatives in the United States live in Louisville and Jeffersonville. He leaves one sister, Mrs. Katie Seaman, of Jeffersonville. He has conducted a florist business in Owensboro for twenty-five years and built up a fine trade, having enlarged his business to the point that he entered the wholesale business. He took especial pride in floral designs and some of the handsomest designs ever seen in Owensboro were made by him.

BUFFALO.

The Club's Outing.

The absorbing event of last week was the annual outing and picnic of the Florists' Club. This year the committee chose our old stamping ground, the Bedell house, near the head of Grand Island in Niagara river. The weather was perfect, the voyage on the broad Niagara delightful, and the sports went off without a hitch. The attendance was good and only a few of the old heads were conspicuous by their absence. For the pleasant results great praise is due the committee of three who managed the whole affair. They were Rowland Cloudsley, W. A. Adams and Ed J. Slattery.

A seven-inning game of baseball, East Side vs. West Side, was hotly contested and brought out lots of enthusiasm. The score was 13 to 9 in favor of East Side.

Battery for the winners, Weise and Boetger; for the losers, Wm. B. Scott and David Scott. The West Side would have won had they been allowed to play Miss Ruby Mark at third base, for she can play all around most of the boys in any position and third base is her specialty.

The results in other contests were:

Ladies' race—Miss Lucy Schafer, 1; Duble Mark, 2; Lillie Heinderick, 3.

Special half-mile race—Won by Al Reichert. Leap frog race, teams—J. Kramer and C. Kutch, 1; W. Grever and Ed Walter, 2; D. Scott and C. Reichert, 3.

Standing broad jump, handicap—William Grever, 1; Ed Slattery, 2.

Old men's race—George McClure, 1; J. Vennerman, 2; W. Elswain, 3.

100 yards open handicap—James Longley, 1; Al Reichert, 2; J. Kramer, 3.

Boys' race—H. Kempker, 1; R. Klodion, 2; G. Anderson, 3.

Running broad jump—D. J. Scott, 1; W. Grever, 2.

Quarter-mile run open handicap—Carl Humphrey, 1; Al Reichert, 2; J. Longley, 3.

Three-legged race—Grever and Walter, 1; Reichert and Longley, 2.

Billy Grever was the champion athlete of the day. Old Hoss Warring was missed at his usual place beside the keg, but in spite of his absence we managed to empty it.

The leap frog race of 100 yards was new to our program and caused lots of fun. The three-legged race for big girls was a great success. The harness was adjusted by a committee of very old men.

At the conclusion of the sports we adjourned to the spacious dining room of the Bedell house. Just 100 sat down and hard to please was he or she who was not pleased with the bountiful reaffairs. What is most striking at these gatherings is the new faces. We once knew almost every soul connected with the business. The boys and girls grow up while we grow into the "has been" brigade.

I regret to say that Mr. Schoenhutt, the very prosperous Williams street florist, was taken down with that alarmingly prevalent malady, appendicitis, while Mrs. Schoenhutt was absent in Washington. He has been dangerously sick, but last accounts were favorable.

Mr. Berkowitz, of Philadelphia, was in town and helped to make the picnic a success.

There is very little business except for those who have gone before. Asters are in great abundance, roses and carnations improving every week.

Was there ever a carnation like Enchantress? Plants lifted from the field in early July are now producing flowers with stems a foot long and fine in size and color. W. S.

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

The outlook for a good early season is very encouraging and many retailers are booking nice orders for fall weddings and receptions. There is nothing of a startling nature on the horizon, but present indications point toward prosperity. Shipping business is looming up somewhat and the home demand is on the increase.

Good stock is still very limited, with past. A little talk was indulged in by W. F. Kasting, who called upon W. S. for "a few remarks," who congratulated the club on the election of Mr. Kasting to the presidency of the S. A. F. and asked for their loyal support of Mr. Kasting during his administration, for the coming year will mark an epoch in the society. The many prizes were next distributed.

Then came two or three hours of the "light fantastic" and then a delightful sail home. Taking it all in all, it was the most successful of all these annual a healthy demand. Roses are gradually improving and a few more weeks will see some good stock. Carnations are beginning to arrive from indoors and are a welcome addition to the cut flower line. Outdoor asters of the Semple variety have suffered considerably this season from the aster beetle, whole crops being ruined. One grower reports a loss of over $200 from this dreaded pest.

ing particularly fine for so early in the season. Roses, after a short period of rest, are making strong breaks. A few hundred Gen. MacArthur are extra fine. Carnations could not look better, being an exceptionally healthy lot of plants, full of buds and flowers. The varieties are Lawson, Boston Market, Enchantress, Crane, Flora Hill and the old stand-by, Francis Joost. Nephrolepis in variety are well done. The new Scottii is a little beauty and should be in good demand. Piersoni is hard to beat, but needs to be a large plant to show off its fine qualities. Bostoniensis is still the best seller and is most in evidence. A fine batch of Lilium lancifolium, both rubrum and album, have produced a very profitable crop. Mums are always a factor on this place and are in prime condition. Here we found asters outdoors in perfection, being the Semple variety at that. Hand picking is the only remedy for the beetle. Mr. Hart has had a very successful year's business and many changes and improvements are being planned for the next year.

Isaac Kennedy, of West Park, while visiting a neighboring florist and returning home, had a very narrow escape with a runaway horse. He was laid up for several days, but I am pleased to report he is able to attend to business and incidentally manage his campaign for councilman. Here's hoping he gets there.

The J. M. Gasser Co. had the C. F. Emery golden wedding decoration at the Roadside club. Yellow and white were used exclusively. It was a very neat and pretty arrangement.

J. M. Gasser and C. F. Darnell have returned from the east, much recuperated and eager for the busy season to open. B. S. Robens, of the same firm, has returned from a sojourn in the country.

H. B. Jones is on an extended trip up the lakes. FOREST CITY.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business has been rather dull the past week. The asters took a jump in price, extra fine ones bringing as high as $2 per hundred, good, long-stemmed white ones being especially scarce. The market is simply flooded with short roses in all colors, while good, long-stemmed roses are very scarce, particularly pink. Bride and Bridesmaid are very poor at present, the best selling at from $4 to $5 per hundred. Some pretty fair carnations are to be seen and, although they are small and only medium in length of stem, they find a ready sale at 75 cents and $1 a hundred. The outlook is for a busy season and it remains for cooler weather to start business, by killing the outdoor stuff and also bringing the society people home from the summer resorts.

The State Fair.

The grounds where the Michigan State Fair is to be held are alive with hundreds of men, most of whom sleep on the grounds. They are getting the new buildings ready for the opening day, September 11. Superintendent F. E. Skeels says the fair will really be a great exposition, covering 145 acres. The Michigan state building from St. Louis has been brought here and re-erected to serve as an office and art gallery. The remaining buildings will be mainly of steel and cement construction, including a steel grandstand with a seating capacity of 6,000 people.

Greening Bros., of Monroe, as well as other large nurserymen have already applied for space on the grounds for nursery exhibits. Professor L. R. Taft, state inspector of the nursery and orchard division of the Board of Agriculture, has arranged for four lectures a day, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Various Notes.

Norman Sullivan has returned from the east, but "J. F." is still at large.

Sickness entered the home of James Taylor, of Mt. Clemens, causing the loss of a daughter four years old. Mrs. Taylor was also very ill, but we are glad to hear she is on her feet again.

Having had rather cool weather, carnation plants are looking fine. Violet plants also give promise of yielding a good crop this season.

It has been rumored that we are to have a new commission and supply house. Although we already have two good wholesale houses, there is always "room for one more."

Miss Clara Schroeter has been spending the past week at Mackinac.

Brother florists are very glad to hear that Herman Knope, foreman at Breitmeyer's Mack avenue greenhouses, who has been very sick, is getting well, "slow but sure."

"Jack" Carey, of Mt. Clemens, paid us a visit last week. When asked how his mums were he replied: "Rotten, but Taylor has three houses of fine plants." That is Carey's way every time. No one ever heard him say his own stock was looking good, although it generally is.

August von Boeselager, of the Bath City, was also in town last week.

Plan Interstate Society.

The florists in this city have given much thought to the plan for the formation of an interstate horticultural society, along the lines suggested by C. R. Panter in his address at the twentieth anniversary banquet August 24. Many of the leading florists were approached and asked for their opinions on the subject and seemed a unit in advocating the organization of a society which would take in all the southern states and bring this section of the country into closer business relations.

C. W. Eichling said he was in favor of the idea, as he thought it would be productive of much good. There are no wholesale florists in the south, according to Mr. Eichling, and he was of the opinion that if such a society were formed there could be stimulated enough competition among the dealers to warrant the larger firms in extending their business and handling the wholesale as well as the retail departments. The plan of action to be followed, in Mr. Eichling's opinion, was to send out communications to every florist or horticultural society in the southern states, and where there were no societies the individual dealers should be addressed, calling for a meeting to be held at some central point for the purpose of hearing the views of the interested parties.

If the society is organized, Mr. Eichling favors a yearly exhibition, at which the members would be expected to compete for prizes. Dealers in supplies sold to florists and horticulturists would also be invited to send samples.

"Anything which means the advancement of horticulture and floriculture in the south will find me a constant and persistent advocate." This was the way Richard Eichling, manager of W. Rehm's nursery expressed himself.

C. R. Panter, the author of the movement, set forth his views on the subject in a forceful address at the banquet. Charles Eble also advocated the movement. He said it was time for the southern florists to get together and know each other better. He took a trip to the north recently and met many prominent men in his line who were much interested in the developments of the south. "We must help ourselves if we want to succeed," said Mr. Eble.

P. A. Chopin, president of the New Orleans Horticultural Society, also thinks well of the suggestion. He promised his support should the movement be inaugurated. Many other members expressed themselves in the same manner.

ORANGE, N. J.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Jersey Floricultural Society was held Friday, September 1. A paper by Anthony I. Manda, gardener for Charles Pratt, Brooklyn, upon "Ornamental Foliage Stove Plants," furnished the topic of the evening. The floral display consisted of Cattleya Harrisonii, with many blooms and great depth of color; Zygopetalum Makayii, Cypripedium Barri (a seedling raised and named by William Barr, of Llewellyn Park), and Oneidium Papilio, grown by Arthur Bodwell; a vase of dahlias and two plates of apples, Greenings and Early Alexander, from Stewart Hartshorne, of Short Hills, grown by Arthur Caparn; a vase of phlox is from the estate of Sidney and Austin Colgate, grown by William Read; collections of flowers and vegetables from John Crosby Brown and Douglas Robinson, grown by Peter Duff and John Gervin respectively; specimen adiantum grown by A. Kindsgrab, and Groff's hybrid gladioli from J. W. Davis.

November 6 and 7 were set for the fall show, schedules of which were distributed, and the exhibition committee was empowered to secure a hall.

The October meeting will have a special dahlia exhibit. J. B. D.

WASHINGTON.

Special Club Meeting.

A special meeting of the Washington Florists' Club, the first since the convention of the Society of American Florists, was held August 26. President Wm. F. Gude called the meeting to order, a majority of the members being present.

Preliminary reports from the chairman of various committees were made, all tending to show that expenses for entertaining were well within the appropriations. J. R. Freeman, of the finance committee, gave evidence of net gains upon advertisements in the souvenir book. Geo. H. Cooke, superintendent of exhibits, had a favorable report to make on the amounts accruing from space charges. The treasurer, W. H. Ernest, who was also the chairman of the bowling committee, Z. D. Blackistone, chairman of shooting, and Wm. F. Gude, chairman of reception, each had the same general story to tell.

Letters of congratulation from visitors were read by the secretary, Peter Bisset. The whole tone of the letters confirmed the statement that the Washington florists had, in the matter of entertaining, surpassed all previous meetings of the national society.

The hit of the evening was the speech of E. C. Snyder, who presented the diamond bowling medal to the champion individual bowler, Charles L. Seybold, of Baltimore, whose score was 513. By some mistake the medal, which was made in New York, was not ready on the last night of the convention. L. B. Burdette stated there is a movement on foot to organize a local shooting team of Washington florists.

Adjournment was to the establishment of J. R. Freeman, where, with all the accompaniments of a stag party—song, speech, food and drink—felicitations of success were exchanged. STAR.

Business at present is beginning to pick up a little. Quite a number of people are returning from their vacations. Roses of all kinds are coming in quite plentifully but prices are low. Good tea roses bring from $2 to $4 per hundred, Beauties from $1 to $3 per dozen, but are a little scarce. La France and Pres. Carnot seem to be in favor. A few good carnations are putting in their appearance and prices range from 75 cents to $1.50 per hundred. Palms and small ferns seem to move well. Those in small sizes sell from 25 cents to $1.

Convention matters have nearly all been settled up and from all indications the convention has been a success, both socially and financially.

Otto Bauer, who has been confined to the hospital for a long time, is rapidly recovering.

Club Doings.

Our new Florists' Club is beginning to live. We have eighteen paid-up members and have a number more coming. After the business part of our last meeting we had a general discussion of matters pertaining to the trade.

George Bayer brought down a few asters that originated with him. They are very double and look similar to a Pink Perfection chrysanthemum. Everybody present thought that a field of them would be a good thing to have. He also brought a few roses, Maman Cochet, White Cochet and Kaiserin. All of them showed good culture.

Our next meeting will be held at Liberty hall on Wednesday, September 20, at which time we hope that every member will bring in a new one and thereby double our present membership.

Various Notes.

In a trip around the city we noticed some fine Begonia Gloire de Lorraine at the Scottwood Greenhouses, of which T. Magee can justly feel proud. His roses and mums are also in good shape.

At Armin Suder's, out at Manhattan, we found the boys busy finishing up carnation planting. The earlier planted houses are looking good and promise a fine crop.

The city will spend $12,000 on an addition to the conservatory at Walbridge park, so as to have more room for large plants and also to provide winter quarters for the sea lions. The new building will be 50x80 feet and fifty feet high, to be built of steel and glass and steam heated. E. A. K.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The past week the weather has been very hot and trade dull in all lines. Now that we are turning into the autumn season better business will be looked for.

The receipts of flowers at the wholesale establishments are about as usual at this time of the year, with prices rather low for the quality of stock that is seen. Roses are beginning to look better, showing longer and stronger stems and the buds firmer. Carnations too, are showing better blooms and longer stems, from under glass. Asters are still coming in big lots, with the best flowers selling well. Common stock is generally kept over for cheap work. Plenty of good valley is to be had. Dahlias are beginning to be plentiful and are already accumulating in the hands of the dealers. Tuberoses are also more than the demand calls for. In greens, smilax, asparagus and maidenhair fern are wanted in only limited quantities, also plenty of common ferns and galax.

Various Notes.

A. C. Canfield, of Springfield, Ill., was a recent visitor.

Miss Badaracco has been very busy of late, with funeral work, having all the work for the funeral of L. M. Rumsey, one of the richest men in St. Louis. Miss Badaracco will leave this week for West Baden Springs for ten days of much needed rest.

Charlie Kuehn, W. J. Pilcher and V. Gorley were the last of the St. Louis party to return from the convention.

August Schuerman, of the Schuerman Floral and Decorative Co., has a new Christmas bell made of birch bark, for which he claims he has taken enough orders to ship east to keep him busy right up to Christmas.

Frank Fillmore's place, on Nebraska avenue, is in fine shape. All his stock is good, especially the roses and carnations, from which much is expected for the fall trade. He is prone to quote the wise sayings of great men and says that "a true Christian is a man who prays for rain when he knows that damp weather gives him rheumatism." The new place on Meramec street is doing quite well.

A. G. Greiner's place on the Natural Bridge road has had many visitors this summer. He has on exhibition 14,000 cacti. Mr. Greiner claims to have the largest collection in this country.

James W. Dunford, out in Central, has everything in tiptop shape for the fall season and from his houses of carnations, roses and violets he expects great things this winter.

Henri Theodore Antoine Hus, experimenter, and Miss Florence Thiell, assistant herbarian, both of the Missouri Botanic Garden, were married on Wednesday of last week. Cupid's other victims in the garden were Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Irish, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Norton, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Thompson and Mr. and Mrs. George McClure. They say that the sixth wedding is looked for very soon.

Don't forget the club meeting next Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. This meeting will take place at Weber's nursery, in Gardenville. The secretary's notice will explain how to get there. President Juengel and President-elect Ammann are looking forward to a large attendance.

C. A. Kuehn, F. M. Ellis, H. G. Berning and George Angermueller, our four wholesale men, attended the S. A. F. convention. Since their return all are hard at work putting their places in shape for the opening of the fall trade.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dietsehy, of Alton, Ill., left last week for an extended trip through the east, for both pleasure and business.

A. Diecks, representing Jansen & Co., New York, called on the trade the past week.

Nick and John Himmers, out at Meramec Highlands, are busy completing five new houses 20x100. When these are completed the Himmers will have 150,000 feet of glass, used for roses, carnations, violets and smilax, from which the trade can look for good stock this winter.

Mr. Zirkmann, representing M. Rice & Co., Philadelphia, made the rounds of the trade here last week.

Fred Weber, Jr., left last week for an extended trip through the east on business and pleasure.

September 2 was the second and last Sunday opening of this year at the Missouri Botanic Garden. The attendance was close to 17,000. The garden is in fine shape. The orchid houses and the tomb of Henry Shaw were the special attractions during the day.

Bowling.

The St. Louis Florists' Bowling Club celebrated on Monday night, September 4. Their guests were Theo. Miller, Fred C. Weber and the DeSoto Florists' Bowling Club. Six alleys were at the disposal of the many friends in the trade who came to do honor to our guests. There was plenty to eat, drink and smoke for all. The crowd was estimated at sixty and it was voted the most successful event ever got up by the florists. Edwardsville, Belleville, Kirkwood, Central and DeSoto were well represented. A match of four games was played between St. Louis and DeSoto bowling teams, which resulted in favor of St. Louis by 312 pins. The score follows:

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

THE report from France is of disappointment at the crop of radish seed.

MARSHAL DRAKE, with J. Chas. McCullough, Cincinnati, has reached home after a European trip.

RICHARD DEAN, the veteran London seedsman, died August 21, aged 76. A note on his life appears on another page in this issue.

REPORTS from the bean growing stations vary with the location. Not more than an average crop is expected at any point and the outlook on the whole is for a comparatively short crop, owing to unfavorably weak and weedy fields.

S. B. DICKS, of Cooper, Taber & Co., London, England, has been in Chicago the past few days. Mr. Comont, of Carter & Co., London, has also been making the rounds in Chicago during the same period.

THE Gardeners' Chronicle says the seed harvest season in England has been one of the most favorable in late years. On light lands the crops have been rushed owing to the drought, but on the whole the crops promise a fair supply. Onions and leeks will be the scarcest articles, peas are generally worm-eaten, and the crops short. As to prices, however, much depends on the actual damage done by the exceedingly heavy hailstorms in the seed-growing districts of Germany.

SECRETARY KENDEL has mailed to members the printed report of the twenty-third annual convention of the American Seed Trade Association, held at Alexandria Bay, June 20 to 22, 1905.

It is reported that the cabbage section, from Chicago north as far as Green Bay, Wis., is not going to produce enough late cabbage to make kraut for Milwaukee, not to mention that Racine and Neenah-Menasha will be needing a good supply.

MARKET gardeners at some of the principal onion growing centers report the onion crop to be the poorest in many years. The stand was poor to begin with, the weeds worse to take care of than they ever experienced and to end up comes rainy autumn weather, which makes it exceedingly hard to save what little remains of the crop.

In the Chicago onion set districts the heavy rain of September 1 flooded many of the fields. The bulk of the crop that is harvested is still standing outside in the crates. Some of the growers had the crates piled up and roofs on, which in a measure protected the onions; others had the crates piled up without any cover and the rain got into them. No special damage is reported, but considerable extra labor in drying out will have to be put on, which will add to the cost of the crop.

At many of the growing stations deliveries of peas are reported to be later than usual. This is laid to the recent wet weather, which has kept the farmers busy saving their crops of other grain, as well as to the fact that those in charge of the receiving warehouses want the deliveries held back to avoid taking in damp peas. Deliveries thus far made are reported to show an uneven size sample, all containing an unusually large percentage of small peas that will screen out in the milling.

THE John H. Allan Seed Co. has completed its new warehouse at Sturgeon Bay, Wis. It is close to the site of the former building, which was destroyed by fire last fall. A feature of the new building is a cement floor on the ground level, which will facilitate trucking to and from the dock in receiving and shipping and make easy work of getting the stock to the elevators. It is a convenient building, with all of the up-to-date cleaning appliances. They still stick to the old-style picking table, preferring that to the picking machines that are taking the place of the old tables in most of the new pea and bean picking establishments.

NEBRASKA SEED CROPS.

J. C. Robinson, Waterloo, Neb., writes as follows under date of September 2:

"Prospects for the vine seed crops in Eastern Nebraska have changed materially in the last ten days. A blight or rust has cut the cucumber crop down one-half or more from earlier expectations. Most crops will make 100 pounds to 150 pounds per acre, while in a few cases they will not make enough to cover harvesting expenses. Musk melons have also been affected by the unfavorable weather but not so seriously. Water melons are late but may yet make a fair crop. Squash, both summer and winter, have made a light setting but the vines are standing up well.

"Early corn is out of the way of frost and will make a good crop. The later varieties are also looking well and have made wonderful progress in the last three weeks. The crop promises to be good, but the sweet corn acreage is not over one-half that of a year ago."

Another large Nebraska grower writes under date of September 5:

"Vine seed crops have not been doing well for the past two or three weeks and the returns will be very much less than anticipated earlier. A spell of hot, dry weather the forepart of August caused the small fruits to drop off and the later setting is likely to be caught by frost. In some fields the vines have died out badly. The returns will depend to a great extent on the time and severity of the first frost and it is hard to make estimates under present conditions."

"Early sweet corn will give good, fair returns, as will the later kinds if the fields mature, but many of them are rather late. Field corn will be just a fair crop, not being eared as well as usual."

Pure Culture Mushroom Spawn. Made in America, and after years of careful experimenting, it has finally been pronounced faultless. We have arranged to represent the most reliable of American Spawn makers and are booking orders for immediate delivery. Pure culture spawn is claimed to be far superior to the English, from the fact that it produces much heavier crops and comes into bearing two weeks sooner.

CINCINNATI.The Market.

Business remains very much as reported last week; that is, very poor. There is scarcely anything doing and all the retailers and wholesalers are complaining. An occasional order for a funeral is about all the demand there is.

There is a large supply of stock, with prices away down. Beauty holds up the best of all. Other roses go very cheap. Some very good stock is coming now, cut from young plants. Asters are still in large supply. George & Allan are sending in some very fine blooms of Semple's Branching aster and they sell best of all. The poorer grades are hard to move at any price. Lilies of all kinds sell fairly well. Carnations are very scarce and what come in are poor. Smilax is scarce but all other kinds of "green goods" are plentiful.

Various Notes.

Geo. S. Bartlett is preparing to push his bone flour business, having just made a contract for a supply of the pure goods.

Ed Foster has just returned from a trip through the west.

J. B. Heiss, of Dayton, O., was a recent visitor.

Saturday evening the regular meeting of the Florists' Club will be held. A good attendance is expected.

C. J. OHMER.

OCEANIC, N. J.

At the meeting of the Monmouth County Horticultural Society, September 1, Anton Bower was elected to membership. William Turner exhibited several vases of nymphæas. N. O'Marana scored 98 points, N. dentata 95, and N. Frank Trelease 98. N. O'Marana measured eleven inches across, and Mr. Turner stated they were cut four days before, but they looked as fresh as if they had been cut less than an hour. He also exhibited some greenhouse pears, which were of enormous size. The variety was Pitmaston Duchess and averaged one and one-fourth pounds. They scored 100 points. George H. Hale had about twenty varieties of fine cactus dahlias on exhibition. W. W. Kennedy

AUSTIN, TEX.

The Hyde Park Floral Co., of this city, has been organized. The members of the new firm are all well known Austin men, F. T. Ramsey, the president of the company, being the proprietor of the Austin Nursery, the largest nursery in the state. A. J. Seiders, the manager, is a gardener of many years' experience, having laid out and had charge of many of the large public grounds and parks of the state and for the past three years was landscape gardener and instructor in floriculture and gardening at the College of Industrial Arts for Young Women, at Denton, Tex. Edgar Hall has been engaged in the florists' business in Austin for a number of years and H. G. West, who is also interested, is one of Uncle Sam's efficient postal employees. The firm is building three greenhouses 14x100, with a lean-to propagating house and a boiler and potting shed. Hot-water heating will be used.

In addition to the propagation of roses and other stock for planting out in the Austin Nursery, a general line of bedding plants will be grown and considerable space will be devoted to growing cut flowers for the local market. A. S.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

T. H. PEYTON, of Mexico, Mo., is about to start a nursery at Boonville, Miss.

C. C. R. MORDEN, Niagara Falls, Ont., is secretary of the recently organized association of Canadian nurserymen.

C. L. WATROUS, the wheel-horse of the Nursery Association's committee on legislation, has come to the conclusion that we shall never achieve a practical federal inspection and quarantine law.

THE question of commissions to gardeners should be settled, at least in New York, by the law which went into effect September 1, making the acceptance of commissions a misdemeanor.

If the American Association of Nurserymen could agree on a standard grade for all classes of stock, and it should not be so very difficult a scale to devise, the whole trade would be compelled to adopt it and everybody would know where he is "at."

A FEW GOOD LILACS.

The lilac is perhaps, more than any other flower, connected with our childhood days, and is on this account appreciated and loved in later years as our earliest floral acquaintance. Many florists as yet do not realize the change that has taken place for the better in the new varieties introduced of recent years, improvements which are as great as has been made with any other flower. It will pay the florists to become better acquainted with them.

The old purple and white varieties (Syringa vulgaris and S. vulgaris alba) usually grow, or sucker up into large bushes, taking up much room, without blooming in proportion to their size. The newer kinds are usually budded, or grafted on lilac seedlings or privet stock, thus keeping them on one stem, in the shape of small trees, and they are loaded with flowers in their season. When planted on the lawn they are effective when in flower. They are nearly or quite free from insect pests, and when planted in good soil will live and flourish many years.

The following twelve varieties are all good kinds and will be sure to give satisfaction, and are plentiful enough to be readily obtainable:

Single Whites.

Frau Dammann, a splendid variety; panicles of flowers very large; color pure white; of medium size. Recommended as one of the very best single whites.

Marie Le Graye for the florist is a valuable variety; the cluster of flowers is large and pure white. It is invaluable for forcing.

Villosa is a very distinct variety, with very large leaves and large clusters of flowers. It is at present perhaps more popular than any other lilac. Its flowers are fragrant, and as it blooms later than other kinds, it is much prized on this account. The color in bud is rosy pink, opening to white. Our friend C. S. Harrison, of York, Neb., in a recent article on lilacs, described it as purple.

more so, perhaps, than any other lilac; a distinct variety with immense panicles of dark red flowers. We think it a most desirable kind and it is appreciated by all who see it.

Double Whites.

Abel Chatenay is a superb variety; panicles large and of the purest white; extra fine; one of the newer kinds.

Mme. Casimir Perier is to our fancy the grandest of all double whites; panicles large and compact; flowers of purest white; a fine variety for forcing.

Mme. Lemoine is an older variety than the two preceding and is better known. It has received first prizes and was highly recommended at the Paris Exposition; flowers large, compact; pure white; a sterling kind, sure to please.

Double in Colors.

Leon Simon is a good grower, producing immense panicles of bluish crimson flowers. The buds are bright red before opening. It is an extraordinary variety, one of the best of double lilacs.

Michel Buchner is a somewhat dwarf variety; the panicle large and erect in growth; very double; pale lilac in color; very fine, distinct and desirable.

President Grévy is the best known of the new double varieties. The panicle Syringa Villosa, the Tree Lilac.

The photograph reproduced, however, indicates that it is a white variety.

Single Reds.

Charles X. is a well tried, distinct and desirable kind, of strong, quick growth; leaves large and shining; panicle of flowers large; color a deep red-dish purple.

Ludwig Spaeth is a strikingly distinct variety, with long panicles of dark, purplish red flowers; a superb kind, and we think the finest of its color.

Rothomagensis rubra, or Rouen variety, foliage like the Persian in shape and appearance. This kind is very showy, of flowers is superb, a foot in length; color a beautiful blue; the individual flowers are large, three-quarters of an inch in diameter. This is a great favorite among lovers of lilacs who know the varieties.

THE Rhus cotinus gives a fine foliage effect, and is sure to attract attention on any lawn. It is that form of the sumach known from its peculiar flower effect as the mist shrub or smoke tree.

Variegated Lawson Carnation

A PHENOMENAL VARIETY.

This beautiful carnation, which we introduced last spring, we are sure will prove not only the best variegated carnation ever sent out, but one of the most popular and profitable carnations in any color that have ever been introduced. The popular conception of a variegated flower ordinarily is that it is not so desirable as a solid color, but Variegated Lawson has proved an exception to the rule, on account of its exceeding beauty and delicacy. If our own retail sales are any index of the popularity of a variety, then Variegated Lawson is bound to be a winner, as the flowers of this sold more readily than those of any other variety.

Aside from its inherent value it will also be sought for on account of the sensation which it created last season in the newspapers, its merits having been heralded widely in the daily press all over the country. The variegation is very beautiful—delicate carmine pencillings on ivory-white ground. It has every good quality—beautiful flower, fine stiff stem, and is exceedingly productive. W. N. Craig, who is an authority on everything pertaining to horticulture, says that he knows that it will outbloom that popular variety, Mrs. M. A. Patten, three to one. The variegation is very similar, but Variegated Lawson has a much better stem and is much more productive. It has the Lawson habit and stem.

White Lawson, which we introduced last year, has proved to be the best white carnation ever put on the market, and we are satisfied that Variegated Lawson will be grown just as largely. Those who are growing moderate quantities of carnations and are obliged to grow several varieties in a house, will find it decidedly to their advantage to plant the different Lawson sports, as they all require the same treatment, and, consequently, will give the best results. A great many carnations are short-season varieties, but Variegated Lawson, like the rest of the Lawson type, has a long season, as the flowers do well during the late spring and summer, when many varieties cease to be at their best.

PACIFIC COAST.

CARNATIONS ON THE COAST.

The most essential point in carnation culture is selecting your cuttings. Next important is preparing them and putting them in the bench to root. Every grower knows how to select his cuttings and put them in the bench, so following that, the point is to root the greatest possible number. I find from my experience the key to success in rooting is to thoroughly soak the propagating bench at the first watering, being sure to have perfect drainage so the water goes right through. After that keep your house moist by syringing frequently during the day and at night. Never let the house become dry. This does not mean to soak the benches every time you look at them. On the contrary, avoid doing so.

By carrying your house moist you will find you have very little watering to do on the benches except on spots where the sun or air strikes them. This applies to either bottom heat or natural heat. With bottom heat you can carry air all the time, day and night, except in extreme climates.

Another thing to guard against with carnations is stem-rot, as every grower knows. To grow immune plants I advise putting cuttings in the sand deep. There is no danger from doing so only by water-logging them; and in the first potting do the same. On the next shift raise your plants to the top of the ball. In one week you will find you have a stem from two to four inches that will never be attacked by stem-rot. H. B.

BOXING HARDY PALMS.

It is a thoroughly wrong idea held by many gardeners that to transplant palms into boxes the winter or late fall is the proper season. This accounts for the remark often heard from men long years in the business, that they are afraid to handle hardy palms unless they are already growing in tubs or boxes. This comes from the fact that poor results have been the rule in many cases where trees have been transplanted from the open.

To box any of the varieties of brahea, washingtonia, phoenix, chamærops or dracæna I have found the months of August and September to be the best time. It is not necessary to have a large ball of earth. A palm six feet high can easily be put in a box twelve inches each way and there is no advantage in making it any larger. We use redwood entirely and bore three or four holes in the bottom of the box. If the soil is dry when the trees are to be taken up, it is easy to scoop away about six inches from the top and give the soil a good soaking and transplant the following day. The ball of earth should be cut square and just enough smaller than the inside of the box to slip in easily. There is no necessity of sacking if the ground is not sandy. After the ball of earth is placed in the box it should be tamped around carefully with a lath and filled in with dry, pulverized soil and, when the box is filled, give another good watering.

With the various kinds of phoenix I invariably tie in all the branches and leave them in that condition for six weeks at least. This makes the boxes much easier to handle and allows them to be packed closer together. With all varieties of braheas and washingtonia, all the leaves except three or four in the center of the plant should be cut off close to the stump. It does not pay to try to save the outside branches, as invariably, no matter how carefully the transplanting is done, they will dry off and it is a much better plan to cut them off and save the palm the exhausting drying-out process. A new crop of leaves will immediately begin to grow and in a couple of months will have formed a fine crown. It is not necessary to cut back any of the varieties of chamærops or dracæna in handling.

When the plants are safely boxed they should be placed close together in a shade house or in a sheltered situation where draughts or hot sun will not reach them. They should be watered several times a day for a few days and afterwards once a day until they give signs of making new leaves. In this way it is possible to successfully handle ninety-nine per cent of your plants at a season of the year when most gardeners do not favor transplanting. I have found this to be the best month for this purpose and there is no comparison with the difficulties encountered in trying to dig and box palms several months hence, at the season when such trees are at their most dormant condition and recovery after a setback is very slow.

I do not make boxes for trees that average from six to eight feet over eighteen inches each way and for those that stand from eight to ten feet in the ground a box two feet each way is ample in size. G.

PORTLAND, ORE.

The Market.

Midsummer trade has been most gratifying and that wholesome, optimistic feeling pervades through all commercial enterprises. While decorative work is no small item, consequent upon so many noted people sojourning in our beautiful city, the call for funeral work is unprecedented. For six successive weeks it was a general clean-up and every flower that looked good to the public was money to the florist. Absence of rain for over two months is felt seriously here now and late outdoor stock is small and short-stemmed. Asters are monarch of the market and carnations have taken a vacation for a month. Those who had the foresight to leave a bench or two of roses for summer use have been well rewarded. It has been demonstrated that it takes an expert to grow a continuous crop of sweet peas, but one grower will have them for six weeks yet.

Various Notes.

From the Lewis and Clark fair officials we learn that the patronage to date has sustained all expectations and that visitors from afar are loud in their praises of our mountain scenery and glorious climate.

We were favored with a call last week from Patrick O'Mara, of New York, who is touring the western country. Mr. O'Mara was very entertaining, relating his experiences of the trip and saw much to interest him while here. We hope he

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

There has been considerable funeral work during the past week but outside of this there has been very little doing. Asters and lilies are especially plentiful and for the former there does not seem to be as much demand as in former years. Lilies of all kinds, however, are good sellers and thousands of stems are disposed of daily. They cost the stores about $1 per dozen for the best quality and retail at about twice that price. Roses are only in fair supply but carnations are becoming a little more plentiful.

Various Notes.

A trip through the chrysanthemum district shows the fields in good shape and the chances excellent for an abundant crop beginning in a couple of weeks. This has been an especially favorable season for the growth of the plants and they are now in heavy bud, excepting the later blooming kinds. The Chinese, as usual, have the bulk of this portion of the business.

Frank Shibley's new store on Polk street, near Sutter, is one of the most attractive establishments in that neighborhood.

E. J. Wickson, of Berkeley, one of the best known horticulturists on the coast, has been given the important appointment of delegate at large for the National Council of Horticulture.

A visit to the carnation houses of A. Galloway, of Fruitvale, shows everything in good, healthy condition and the promise of abundant blooms in the near future.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

The condition of trade is becoming brighter. As the weather continues to keep cool and the society folks are coming back, social events are more numerous, giving quite a large amount of work for the decorators.

As for stock, roses are in better shape and there is commencing to be a good, healthy demand. Beauties are very scarce, the demand exceeding the supply. Carnations are hard to get. Some short-stemmed stock is seen, but the demand is light. Some very fine asters are on the market, with prices a shade better than formerly. There has been a large quantity of funeral work the past week and everything was pretty generally cleaned up and the promises for future business are very satisfactory.

Various Notes.

The Geo. M. Kellogg cup, given by that gentleman as a trophy to be presented to the florist making the highest score in a bowling contest during the week of the flower show, has been completed, and is on exhibition at Mr. Kellogg's store. It is a fine piece of work.

Miss M. Dalley reports business as being very good the past week.

Ed Tonquist has become an enthusiastic bowler and is having dreams of gathering in that silver cup.

The Owl Florists, who have not yet been quite a month at their new location, report business as increasing to a very satisfactory extent. They are stocking up with some very good material and are looking forward to a busy season.

E. A. Humfeld is making quite an improvement in his store by putting in a new front.

The Alpha Floral Co. reports business during the warm weather as all that could be expected. They look forward to an increase in their business during the coming season, having added decorating to their facilities.

ABUNDANCE

The Most Wonderfully Prolific Carnation Ever in Existence.

It hasn't any prizes, certificates of merit medals or anything of that sort to recommend it; but it has nine years of wonderfully prolific life to its credit, which the certificated, be-medaled varieties have not when first offered to the trade. I have grown it exclusively ever since I got stock enough to fill my houses with, and intend to grow no other variety while Abundance pays me so well. It is as strong, healthy and prolific today, as in the first years of its life. The color is a pure white, very fragrant, of medium size, 2½ inches in early fall and winter, reaching 8 inches in late winter and spring, with a stem 14 inches in fall, stretching to 2½ and 8 feet in winter and spring. It has the slim, wiry growth of Lizzy McGowan of which it is a seedling crossed by Wm. Scott, but it surpasses its parents by far in blooming quality. In fact there isn't anything with which to compare in that respect. It is an exceedingly free, rapid and healthy grower. Has never been subject to stem rot or any other disease, can be transplanted at any time or in any way without the care and the fuss which have to be bestowed on the heavy, sappy varieties, as it takes hold of the new situation at once and never turns a leaf yellow. Is an absolute non-cropper; but is literally loaded with shoots in all stages of development, from the time they are benched until thrown out in summer. It is not an untried variety that is barely brought into existence until it is put on the market only to disappear in a year or two; but it is one by which I have earned my living for years and is likely to do for some years to come, it is a carnation for the bread-winner and not for the fancier.

Price, $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000. Cash with order, please. Cuttings delivered in strict rotation as soon as rooted, and nothing but first-class stock sent out as I have an abundance of stock to produce from.

The Market.

Entirely too many pink and white Cochet roses are shipped to this market. Thousands go to waste every day. Asters sell well and more good white could be used. Some American Beauties of fair quality are already being cut from the young stock and some good Brides and Maids are also seen. "Greens" were a little short in supply for about a week but enough for all demands are now available.

Various Notes.

The Gardeners' Club had a smoker at the last meeting. There was a large attendance and a number of proposals for membership were made. F. Bauer displayed asters grown under glass. The varieties were: Kate Lock, shell pink, with about four and a half to five feet of stem; Benthey's White and Benthey's Pink, with fine large flowers. It was said that to grow them like these it does not pay to sell them for less than $5 per hundred and that you would not get rich off of that figure. A large crop which was planted outside is a complete failure.

R. Vincent, Jr., & Son, of White Marsh, are building a new office and packing house 30x210, four stories high.

Philip B. Welsh has sold his stock and greenhouses at Waverly to Wm. Stean.

FIELD-GROWN

Asparagus Sprengeri

Those who have purchased our field-grown plants in the past are convinced that they are much superior to pot-grown, both for pots and bench culture.

When housed they immediately start into active growth, throwing up numerous growths, which come to perfection much earlier than those from pots. Field culture adds to the vigor of the plants and an enormous crop of green is the result.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

September is here, the weather is grand, but there is only a slight improvement in trade. Several of the retailers say they are booking some nice orders for fall and the general impression is that we are going to have a good season. The markets complain that it is unusually quiet with them now.

Roses are improving every day; bright weather, not too hot, is helping them. Carnations continue scarce, but asters are exceptionally fine and the carnation shortage does not cause any inconvenience.

Various Notes.

Joseph E. Bonsall, of Salem, O., was a visitor last week. He is adding about 30,000 feet of glass to his place and will grow cut flowers exclusively for the wholesale trade.

Geo. A. Heintz, Toledo, O., was in the city last week and called on most of the trade in a social way. He says they all look good to him. He made a trip out to the Pittsburgh Rose and Carnation Co. and saw their houses 50x450 feet filled with clean, healthy stock, not an inch of waste room on the place; a strictly up-to-date heating plant, their own gas well to furnish fuel for the boilers and light all over the farm; also an oil well to contribute about forty barrels a day just to keep things running smoothly; a hotel for the accommodation of the single men; fourteen dwellings, which will accommodate seventeen families; a bowling alley for amusement; several barns, storage-house, packing-house and everything which goes to make a strictly up-to-date place.

Mr. Heintz says it is nearer his ideal than anything he has seen except the hills, but you know he is from the flat country and we cannot expect him to appreciate these as we do.

Henry Wiggins was the only representative of the trade in the Labor day parade. He had a float representing a river with a bridge; on the bridge was a crane with a broken bomb. This is a funeral design for structural iron workers and was with their division. Mr. Wiggins says structural workers never die, but are always killed by accident, which explains his design. Hoo-Hoo.

I ALWAYS enjoy the REVIEW exceedingly, with its timely advice, entertaining articles and well placed advertisements.—S. L. Young, Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

SCORES OF FLORISTS USE Hammond's Grape Dust CHRYSANTHEMUMS AND CARNATIONS

This comes from WALLACE GOMERSALL, superintendent of the famous "Wodenethe," owned and finely maintained by Winthrop Sargent, Esq., Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.:

"For chrysanthemums we use GRAPE DUST with the best results by freely dusting with it until the delicate blooms come, then we are a bit shy of it, to prevent any staining of the petals, but during the green state, even in bad weather, there is no trace of fungus, and we keep free of the spot. I have recommended it to many gardeners, and so far my acquaintances have found it very valuable. In common with many gardeners and florists, I have found it of great value in checking the rust on carnations. It is not expensive to use, for by using in air bellows it diffuses itself everywhere, and is in my judgment, a valuable every day article. For roses it is of exceptional benefit against mildew."

How to Use Grape Dust for Violets, etc., in the Greenhouse.

Fill the house with dust as soon as the plants are set, and let it settle over the plants, or put one pound to a pail of water and spray it finely over everything, plants, ground, benches, etc. Spores are likely to settle anywhere about and prevention is the best remedy. Its fineness, its reliability, and its great diffusiveness combine to make GRAPE DUST take the highest rank as a popular and economical fungicide.

A COIL BOILER.

We have three houses to heat with a coil boiler. First is a rose house 16x40, then a plant house 18x30 and parallel with these a carnation house 18x50, all fairly well protected. Our present coil boiler contains sixty-five feet of 1½-inch pipe. We thought of getting another set of tees for 1-inch pipe and making it a twin heater, so we could use only one in mild weather. Or can we enlarge our present heater by doubling the pipe back, making the coils three deep?

A. B.

To heat the present plant to 60 degrees in severe weather the houses should be provided with at least 600 feet of radiation, or 960 lineal feet of 2-inch pipe. The present pipe heater has a capacity for carrying about 260 feet of radiation, a little less than one-half what should be available to heat the present plant if located in the latitude of New York city; if south of that a little less will do. You will therefore be safe in doubling the present capacity of your heating plant, preferably by building a larger boiler. For plans of a pipe heater see FLORISTS' REVIEW, December 31, 1903, pp. 269.

PIPING A LEAN-TO.

I have built a greenhouse 14x26 attached to the south side of my dwelling. The roof is thirteen feet high at the top and eight feet at the eave plate. The two ends and south side are glass. What size of heater will be required in Ohio climate? There are three benches in the house. What size of pipe would you use and how should it be distributed?

L. W. B.

A boiler rated to carry 200 feet of radiation will be large enough to heat the house in question. The radiation for this house can be supplied by providing six runs of 1¼-inch pipe running along the three exposed sides of the building. The pipe can be arranged in a flat coil against the outside wall or it can be placed under the benches. In making up the coils 300 lineal feet of 1¼-inch pipe should be used.

L. C. C.

NEVADA, MO.—G. P. Kaupp & Son have just completed two new greenhouses 22x100 and begun the erection of another.

MEDINA, O.—Hammerschmidt & Clark report trade very quiet for two months. They are putting up a house 20x30. Carnations are still in the field because the plants remain small.

NOW IS THE TIME TO BEGIN!

THRIPS.

With the season of steady firing approaching, when we should be cutting our best crops, there is always the danger of thrips lurking in the houses, ready to pounce on our best specimens. Especially is this the case in Beauty houses.

To get rid of this pest before it becomes too numerous, and before our crops are so far developed that the insect can find a lodgment among the petals, measures strong and drastic should be adopted now. This pest is very often introduced into the house with the first mulching material used, either in the form of eggs or in the larval stage, and under the genial conditions of the rose house thrives and multiplies rapidly.

As a preventive to this introduction of thrips the manure pile should be kept free of weeds and turned over frequently during the summer, as these weedy spots are the places where they congregate. It is also advisable to keep down weeds in the vicinity of the houses and, if possible, to burn the herbage during a dry spell.

To clean them out of the houses after they have a foothold requires a great deal of work, patience and perseverance, as the broods come rapidly and, although the adult insect succumbs readily to tobacco fumes, they are so active that it is hard to get the fumes to touch them, as they run to cover on the first intimation of danger.

The larvæ, making their home among the mulch and loose soil on the surface of the bench, are still harder to reach and it is only by persistently keeping after them and catching each brood at the stage where it is easiest destroyed that we can get the best of them.

It is much easier and safer to use the measures necessary to effect this purpose before the plants begin to produce their crops than afterwards, as the frequent use of fumes is almost certain to bleach the petals and destroy their value.

The use of cayenne or red pepper, which has frequently been advocated in these columns, if intelligently and persistently applied is a sure and safe remedy. This should be applied somewhat in the following manner:

Get some iron plates 8x12 inches in size; heat them till they are red and lay them in the paths at distances of twenty-five feet apart. The operator should then start at the end of the house farthest from the door, covering each plate with the pepper, and get out of the house as quickly as possible, as the fumes are very disagreeable and even dangerous. In two hours the fumes will have done their work and the ventilators can be raised.

The usual weekly fumigation should not be allowed to lapse during this course, as we have found from experience that these pepper fumes have little impression on green fly. RIBES.

ANTHRACNOSE.

For years I have found Mme. Chate-nay to die out considerably during the months from February to May. The stock was usually planted in June, in solid beds, and made a fine growth, but in a short time a part of the plant would ter, this seems to be a case of rose anthracnose, but without examining a specimen it is impossible to diagnose the case with any certainty and hence it is not safe to recommend a remedy. Lift one of the affected plants, shake off the soil, pack the root in damp moss and forward, and I will give the best advice in my power, whether the trouble be as I suspected, or otherwise. RIBES

A. B. CARTLEDGE.

A. B. Cartledge, senior partner of the firm of Pennock Bros., Philadelphia, is one of the most deservedly popular young men in our profession. His interest in the pioneer florist of Philadelphia is inherited from his father, whose memory is kept green in the hearts of all who knew and loved him. Mr. Cartledge's sunny disposition never fails to win the friendship of his business associates; he combines in a rare degree what may be termed the vital spark with that quiet decision that overcomes worries, both great and small, and robs "no" of its sting. seem to dry up and die, affecting the entire plant in about two weeks' time. One after another they would die in this way. What do you think of it?

From what I can gather from this letters do not take kindly to it at present. No one can question that it is one of the most beautiful ferns we have, and I have no doubt but that it will eventually take a leading place among market ferns. In a chat with one grower who has a good stock, I learned that he was disposed to restrict his stock, but I believe this would be a mistake. There is one thing—that is, it will require rather different cultural treatment to what some have been giving it. I have a plant before me in my room which has been here fully two months, and it looks as well now as the day I brought it home. This had been grown fully exposed, forming a bushy plant with rather short, nearly erect fronds. It is surprising how well these apparently tender ferns stand when fully exposed to sunshine. It was not until N. exaltata was grown suspended to the roof, where it had the full benefit of the light, that it became a favorite; now there is no more popular fern comes into the market. While about nephrolepis I may say that Westoni, the crested variety of ensifolia (often seen under the name acuta) may be regarded as a useful fern, especially in a small state. There is one fault, that is, it produces spores freely, and when grown on into larger plants, it has a dusty brown appearance.—Horticultural Advertiser.

SCALE ON NEPHROLEPIS.

I herewith enclose fronds of Nephrolepis Scottii attacked by some kind of scales, of which I cannot get rid, although I am using tobacco dust freely. As I have maidenhair in the same house I dare not smoke. Kindly tell me how I can fight this pest successfully.

E. F. W.

This scale is giving much trouble to growers of nephrolepis, and is equally troublesome on many other ferns if allowed to get ahead. Tobacco dust has little effect upon the scale and a better plan would be to cut off the worst fronds and burn them, then give the plants a dipping in solution of tobacco extract, using one part of Rose Leaf Extract of Tobacco to forty parts of water. This solution may injure the tender young tips of the growing fronds to some extent, but this injury would be much less serious than the total ruination of the plants by the insects. W. H. TAPLIN.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Supports.

Some years ago, when the trade called for carnations with practically no stem, very little thought was given to the question of support, but now that the demand is for blooms with stems from eighteen to thirty inches in length, we must needs give the matter serious consideration, for not only is it necessary to take the plants' natural inclination into account, but the labor and expense of putting up and maintaining a system of supports is an item of considerable size in the cost of production.

The carnation by nature is anything but desirable in its habit of growth, presenting, as it does, a very sprawly appearance, beautiful, no doubt, to the aesthetic mind but not so to the commercial grower, who has a habit of viewing things from the bread and butter standpoint. Varieties differ somewhat in their general make-up but all can be said to possess the let-me-lay-down tendency in some degree.

From the time the cutting leaves the sand until lifted from the field we have in mind to build a shapely plant, a comparatively easy task when the plants are small and low in stature but under glass, as the plants increase in size, and shoots are allowed to run to flower, means must be provided to maintain straight growth of stem, also to keep the lower branches off the soil, and in general to prevent sprawliness.

Now, to do this with a plant so impatient of restricted quarters requires more than a passing thought lest we infringe too much on nature. Space forbids a description of the many different styles of supports in use, or reference to the shortcomings of each. Suffice it to say that the ideal has not as yet appeared and in all probability never will. The two systems most in use are the Model Extension, a patented article, and the home-made plan of stretching wires lengthwise of the bench between rows and along the outer ones, strings being run crossways of the bench, knotting at each wire, thus forming a square around each plant. These wires and strings are put up in tiers as growth demands. Some growers do away with the lower section, employing wire netting bent in shape of an inverted "V."

Whatever style is used, one important point is to put them on, or at least that part which is to serve in preventing the lower branches from contact with the soil, before the plants have increased much in size. The complete support to the plant proper is preferably in place directly all dead foliage has been removed, the surface soil a few times broken up and all weeds destroyed. Under no circumstances should the support be of such nature, or so applied, as to interfere with free circulation of air through and around all parts of the plant, not only when first applied, but allowance must be made for material increase in the number of shoots as the season advances.

Any attempt at crowding the plant into too small space is only to invite trouble. The flower shoots will become drawn and probably never reach maturity, the lower foliage will suffer and water applied in showering cannot properly dry out.

In this connection it is hoped that plants were not too thickly set at planting time. If such be the case it would pay to thin them, using caution and not doing it on a wholesale plan. Setting plants too thickly will not cause two carnations to grow where one grew before.

GEO. S. OSBORN.

CARNATION NOTES.

Air and Water.

Now is the time to exercise reason and good judgment, combined with careful watchfulness, in watering and syringing the carnations, for it is presumed that all are housed before this. The plants are forming new roots under new conditions, very different to those which existed while the plants were growing in the field. It will be well to remember that the conditions of the greenhouse are entirely artificial and the aim of the grower should be to make them as natural as possible by giving the plants a constant supply of pure air. By a supply of pure air I do not mean a draught of air at a speed of thirty to forty miles per hour. Get the air by raising the ventilators enough to secure a free circulation and give water when needed.

Syringe only on bright days and early in the day, to the end that the foliage may be dry before night. Examine the soil in several places on the benches, especially about the sides, for the sides always dry out more quickly than the middle of the bench, and in watering go over these dry places some time before with the hose and then follow up later with an even watering over the whole bench, but bear in mind that the days are getting shorter and the sun lower, so the beds will not dry out as fast as they did a month ago.

We must harden up the growth a little for the time when there will not be so much root action; therefore it is well to be sure the benches are in condition to need water. If so, try to apply it with judgment. If you are in doubt as to whether the plants need water, better put off the watering until the next day at this time of the year. RAG.

THE CARNATION RUST.

I wish you would inform me as to the cause and remedy for the spots you will see on the carnation leaves I send. The variety is Enchantress and out of 1,000 plants only six show these spots on the leaves. The bench was planted last March, so that the stock has been inside all summer. What causes Enchantress to be sleepy or burst its calyx? W. L. K.

The spots on the leaves you enclosed are the common carnation rust. As most growers will remember, about twelve or thirteen years ago this disease caused the greatest fear among carnation growers, lest it would destroy the race, and many remedies were suggested and tried. But after a time it was discovered that by proper, everyday treatment the carnation can be kept comparatively free from this disease, and the present-day grower does not become alarmed at sight of a speck here and there in his houses.

When looking for the cause of these eruptions on the leaves you must go back farther than you might suppose. These brown spots and the powdery-looking substance is merely the fruiting or the spores which perpetuate a fungus which has been working inside the leaf for some time. These plants may have had this disease ever since they were cuttings, but conditions were not favorable for its development until just lately, when it became active and produced this crop of spores. Why did it break out on these few plants and not in all the others, do you ask? Why does one person in a crowd or community contract a case of small-pox when hundreds of others live and work all around them without taking it? These plants most likely had it in them and they happened to get into proper condition for its development and it broke out. Some of the other plants may break out later on, too, if conditions continue favorable.

The first thing to do is to pick off the spotted leaves and burn them, thereby destroying the means of propagation. Then dust the plants with air-slaked lime and keep the atmosphere dry, especially at night. Syringe only when necessary and give all the air you can and don't put off firing too long, if this disease begins to spread over the house. A close, warm atmosphere is sure to cause it to spread and you will find that in handling most all of these fungous diseases plenty of pure, fresh air is the most important of all.

Enchantress is a hard carnation to handle; in fact, it is one of the most rampant growers and if given half a show it will produce fine, large blooms on fine stems and of a beautiful color. There are, however, two things you must guard against, and as they are caused by just opposite conditions you will have to be all the more careful. They are burst calyxes and sleepy blooms. The latter was complained of more than the former during the past two seasons, but it was found that where reasonable treatment was given, neither caused any trouble. Enchantress is a very large carnation. The petals are fleshy and so is the whole plant and any kind of food is absorbed quickly. While feeding will add some to the size of the flowers, the greatest change is produced in the texture of the petals. These become soft and will not last like those which have not been fed so highly. The same result is produced by a too high temperature, which, I think, has caused more complaint than feeding.

Enchantress will burst some during the winter months and as soon as this was noticed the natural move was to raise the temperature, which is considered the surest cure for burst calyxes. It will stop your Enchantress from bursting a small percentage of its calyxes, but it ruins the whole crop by making the blooms too soft. So be reasonable; give them a moderate temperature, about 50 degrees, and don't feed too heavily during the dark days, and especially avoid such foods as contain too much nitrogen, as they will soften the petals.

DREER'S PHLOXES.

Just after the Washington convention of the S. A. F. the Dreer establishment at Riverton, N. J., was visited by many admirers of a well-kept place. In spite of the fact that Dreer's is the largest plant factory in America, Mr. Eisele sees to it that everything is kept as neat as wax and the cleanliness of which so many convention visitors spoke with approval was no Sunday suit donned for the occasion, but the everyday apparel of the place. The range now contains about 500,000 feet of glass and it is not only at all times in perfect order but it is, so to speak, all under one roof, for from every house the packing shed and office may be reached without going outdoors, which is a great help to shipping in unfavorable weather.

At the convention date the outdoor display was at its best, cannas, petunias, phloxes, etc., and attracted as much attention as did the stock under glass. The collection of phloxes is one of the largest in existence and all the best varieties are there. The wealth of color in such a field as that shown in the accompanying illustration is something a lover of hardy flowers does not soon forget.

NILES, O.—C. L. Adgate is building two houses, 24x100 each.

PEONIES.

The following seasonable instructions on the soil preparation, planting and culture of peonies are taken from the writings of A. Dessert, the French grower, who for sixty years has made a specialty of the peony:

The peonies are perfectly hardy and so robust that they grow well in any ordinary garden soil. However, they furnish the largest and most desirable flowers when planted in good, deep-trenched ground, and in situations where the soil retains a moderate degree of dampness. If the soil be poor, it should be copiously mixed with rich old manure. Cow manure is the best for all the soils which are of a light character. Manure must not come into direct contact with the roots.

Tree peonies must be set as deeply as they were before in nursery.

In setting the herbaceous peonies, the plants should be inserted with the crowns, or dormant buds, about three inches below the surface of the soil and should then be well watered.

When planted in autumn in strong plants, peonies can produce a few flowers in the following spring, but it is only the second or third year after planting that they will produce normal flowers.

Peonies rapidly thrive, increasing in strength and beauty every year, and the third year after planting, they have already become large clumps which produce many blossoms; therefore peonies need about three feet between each plant for their development.

To maintain a luxuriant vegetation, add to the soil every autumn a copious dressing of old manure.

Peonies may be planted either in borders, groups or beds; they are always very ornamental in whatsoever way they are planted. They succeed no matter what the situation may be, but the flowers remain fresh longer when they are in partly shaded places.

When they are exposed to the full sun, they can be covered with a light cloth; the flowers thus protected acquire a really remarkable, fine color, and the flowering lasts much longer.

Peonies are not delicate plants; however, you must avoid to plant them too near voracious shrubs, the roots of which exhaust the soil. But you may plant by the peonies plants of a not cumbrous nature, the roots of which do not exhaust the soil, such as standard roses, gladioli, etc.

Peonies do not require frequent watering, but during the seasons of extreme drought, and on light soils, copious draughts of water or liquid manure once or twice a week will assist in the formation of good stout buds for the following season.

In spring when the buds are well formed, little side buds should be taken off when the largest blooms are desired, but where peonies are planted for the ornament of the gardens, I should advise to leave them, because these secondary flowers (which are still generally very fine) prolong the duration of flowering for some time.

It is useful to surround the stems of herbaceous peonies with a few light ties, such as raffia, fixed to a little prop to protect them from a gust of wind.

Each fall after the first hoar-frosts the tops of the peonies should be cut off on a level with the soil.

The best time for planting peonies is September and October, as soon as the temperature is cool enough for the plants to be sent without damage. However, peonies may be planted safely at any time that the ground is in good condition from September to March.

Peonies carefully packed in boxes with moss are never damaged during the longest journeys, even if they are overtaken on the way by the hardest frosts. It is sufficient to put them, when arrived, in a cellar or other place of moderate temperature, during two or three days, before getting the plants out of the boxes.

crowded into half the space with more labor?

The second and larger illustration is a casket wreath of yellow and purple pansies with pink and yellow snapdragons. The easel shown does not belong to the wreath, as the wreath is unmounted, the easel being merely to display the piece for photographing.

The principal feature about this wreath is the coloring, the light, summerish air which the coloring produces being a different look from that of the all-winter combination of roses and carnations.

The wreath frame is prepared in the usual way, with a green background. A second background is then set in; of yellow and purple pansies, stemmed long and inserted in the moss not too closely together, but with a definite plan as to coloring. Many more mixed flowers than solid colors are found in a pansy bed. Choose the solid yellow, solid purple and those mixed ones that combine these two colors. While stemming keep the colors sorted as just mentioned. When ready to fill in the wreath, select the darkest purple and fill in a section of the wreath as far as the amount of material will cover. Next insert those of slightly lighter purple, and so on until the solid purples are exhausted.

Then pick out those flowers which show the smallest addition of yellow with the purple and grade in the coloring as was done with the solid purples. Continue the process till the patch of coloring gradually loses the purple and approaches solid yellow.

Lay in the solid yellow pansies and complete and space about two-thirds of the distance around the frame. Glance over the work so far completed and you will see an easy transition from dark to light which could never be accomplished by an indiscriminate mixing of these same colors.

Lastly make a loose spray of pink

PANSY FANCIES.

Not infrequently the soft summer flowers are wanted, both in sprays and design work. When as short-stemmed as pansies, they are none too easily arranged, especially in sprays. To get around this difficulty make use of some tough, wiry green, like asparagus, for a foundation. Bend in any desired shape and wire the pansies on with the finest wire obtainable. Many different positions, both full front, side and back views of the pansy faces, make the best piece. Slip the pansy stems in line with the stem of the asparagus, and keep them there, as though growing out from the asparagus stem. Wrap under the asparagus leaves so that the wire cannot show.

Have some definite plan as to the placing of the colors. In the first picture dark pansies are massed on the heavy part of the supposed crescent wreath. Gradually work in next the lighter shades and tints, according to the amount of color, and bring the very lightest around the narrow part.

The principal value of the simple design under discussion consists, not so much in its present worth in money, as what it indicates in ready inventive ability in two directions, namely, what can be done with a few pansies and a spray of asparagus can be done with fine roses, violets and orchids, with a great saving of time and fully as good an effect as a design frame would afford and much better for delicate flowers.

It might be well to suggest here that no very small percentage of the retail value of the flowers in a piece like this should be added for the "knowing how." Circumstances and surroundings must determine the amount for individual cases.

The second value in the design is that it shows the growing tendency to substitute loose arrangements which will sooner or later displace set design work. Why not make a cross of loose roses attached to a heavy wire, in half the time, with a larger piece to finish with, than use the same number of flowers and yellow snapdragons on a heavy mat of asparagus, the pink forming the tip of the spray and being in the majority. Lay the spray flat over the unoccupied part of the wreath, so that the pink tip shall fall over the purple pansy section and the yellow at the base of the spray shall reach the yellow pansy section. Fasten the spray securely to the wreath frame in several places, with wire pins, and pull out a number of asparagus tips to break the even outline of the inside and outside edges of the wreath. Allow some of the stems of the spray to be seen, as on the left of the design in the picture.

This color scheme, carefully worked out, will afford good drill in blending colors, as well as present a strong union of colors, which, being correct, cannot help but be attractive and pleasing.

GERTRUDE BLAIR.

THE TRADE AT NEW ORLEANS.

The following review of trade conditions at New Orleans is by Richard Eichling, manager for William Rehm:

The florists and seedsmen of New Orleans have the satisfaction of looking back upon a most prosperous business year, covering every branch of the trade. The actual season of the florist in this city is comparatively short on account of our location. It begins with the month of October and ends about July 1. Out of these nine months only six can be accounted as actual business months.

With a few exceptions nearly all the plants sold in New Orleans are now grown by local florists, and the time will not be far off when some of the larger of these firms will grow stock for the wholesale shipping trade to northern cities, showing that this progressive city, with its energetic and enterprising business men, is gradually breaking its way to the front in every line of trade.

The quantity of plants employed to beautify the Crescent City reaches into the hundreds of thousands each year, and passing now through the fine residence avenues, the terrible destruction wrought by the severe winter of 1899 is hardly visible. Gradually the neutral grounds on the street railway rights of way, as well as every available space along the sidewalks of the various elegant residence districts, are planted with hardy palms, either Phoenix Canariensis or the Washingtonia filifera, or with many varieties of ornamental shade trees which will tend to make New Orleans in a short time one of the most beautiful cities of the country.

During the past year several new floral establishments were erected, and others remodeled. Two of these, the one of William Rehm and that of P. A. Chopin, are deserving, on account of their elegance and strictly modern construction, of special mention. These two are in the upper district of the city and are valuable acquisitions to their respective localities. A third one, that of the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co., outside of the city proper, is likewise a strictly modern plant, comprising an area of about 200 acres.

In New Orleans are some of the largest seed firms in the south, supplying the gulf states, as well as Texas, with immense quantities of all kinds of garden, field and flower seeds. Some of these, the J. Steckler Seed Co., J. A. Schindler Seed Co., and C. W. Eichling, report that the past year has been an exceptionally good one and their output larger than ever before. Of all seeds sown in the southern states only a small quantity is grown here. The most valuable of these is the so-called Creole onion seed, and then follow Creole parsley, cabbage, carrots, cucumbers, eggplants, musk melons and some others.

In the vicinity of New Orleans are located some of the largest truck farmers in the south. Their owners are generally a high class of citizens, Americans, Germans, French and Italians. On their large farms the earliest vegetables for the home and northern markets are grown—in fact, some of them all the year around. For the shipping trade the most important are beans, peas, lettuce, cabbage and cucumbers. Whole refrigerator car-loads are consigned every day over local railroads during the shipping season.

The greatest and most modern plant in Louisiana for the cultivation of early cucumbers under glass for the wholesale shipping trade is owned and managed by O. Arten, in Carrollton.

Regardless of the unpleasant situation in New Orleans, the florists comprising the New Orleans Horticultural Society, encouraged by the promised co-operation of the Louisiana branch of the International Sunshine Society, are working harder than ever to make the coming flower show in November the most successful ever held here. They are fully convinced that, by that time, all those spending the summer months at the different health and pleasure resorts, will have returned and all will be eagerly awaiting the opening day.

RETAILERS' ADVERTISING.

It is worth any business man's time to give a little attention to his advertising. Too many retail florists either do not advertise at all or else are content to let the same general advertisement run in season and out, the year around—if they keep it up that long. That isn't the way to advertise.

All men who have thought on the subject concede that the most potent factor in modern business life is the power of advertising. Most of the great business institutions of the day have been built up by newspaper publicity backed up by efficient business methods. But the best advertising in the world will prove unavailing if the store does not fulfill the promise of the advertisement. Indeed, the advertisement which is deceitful not only reacts upon the individual advertiser but it shakes the readers' confidence in all other advertising and for this reason the wise publisher keeps close watch upon his advertisers and is not slow to dispense with the patronage of one who does not keep faith with the public. This is particularly true where mail orders accompanied by remittance are sought.

But to get back to the subject, the department store advertiser does not expect to turn the thoughts of the entire community in his direction with the announcement, "The Emporium, headquarters for everything from a Toothpick to a load of Coal." Neither should the retail florist expect large returns from a "card" in his local paper. Any advertising is better than no advertising, but a "card" is about the poorest of all; it is only good for directory purposes. Keep out of the church fair programs, the souvenir books and the like and you will save enough money to start the use, in your best local newspaper, of space enough to tell a little story, describe some special stock or quote a price on a seasonable item—if it isn't seasonable even a money-losing price will not serve to attract more than one or two buyers.

But having once made a start in the right direction do not lose interest. Keep changing the advertisement. Too many advertisers who are making a small beginning fail to keep up with the work made necessary. Change the "copy" frequently; never let the advertisement get stale. It costs the publisher money to re-set advertising but most of them have found out that the advertiser who gives some thought to the use of his space and changes copy frequently is the one who is a permanent because successful advertiser and likely to increase his space from year to year as his business grows. Most large newspapers and many small ones now employ men for the one purpose of preparing new copy for those advertisers who would not otherwise change as frequently as they should. The Minneapolis Journal has a man specially detailed to look after horticultural advertisers.

Some advertisers crowd their advertisements too much; others buy more space than they can fill. The Uticans seem to have about the right sense of

A WELL-KEPT PLACE.

The accompanying illustrations are from photographs taken a few days ago at the establishment of Isaac Husbands, at Bellevue, Ohio. They show a model establishment and should inspire in the owners of similar places a desire to make an equally attractive showing. The dwelling is covered with Ampelopsis Veitchii; the lawn is smoothly shaven and the flower beds are an inspiration to Mr. Husbands' customers. There are about 3,000 plants in his yard, consisting principally of geraniums, backed up by over forty of the best varieties of cannas.

Mr. Husbands has been in business at Bellevue for about ten years and has constructed the place shown in the photographs. He is an Englishman and had a horticultural training before coming to America. He has lived in this country twenty-six years and prior to starting in business for himself was gardener for the late C. A. Otis and for P. D. Eells, at Cleveland.

Mr. Husbands says that he often wonders why florists do not take more pride in the appearance of the grounds surrounding their homes and their places of business, as he finds the condition of his grounds not only a pleasure but profitable to him in a business way.

BEST DAHLIAS FOR CUTTING.

Samuel S. Pennock, the wholesale florist, of Philadelphia, through his lieutenant, Clarence J. Watson, expressed the wish that the REVIEW readers should know something about the fancy dahlias filled with dahlias, planted in long, straight rows, four feet apart, the plants vigorous and full of buds, not a weed to be seen, a magnificent sight.

The varieties grown especially for cut flowers have been skillfully pinched and disbudded to produce long stems, the progress in this point of culture being marked. Full advantage has been taken of the favorable season. Cultivate! Cultivate!! Cultivate!!! This is evidently the watchword of the place. It would be hard to imagine a cleaner, healthier looking lot of dahlias than those 130 acres.

But to the varieties. Here is the greatest progress. The cactus, the single and the decorative classes have all made rapid advance. New varieties in each class, some originated, some from abroad, give a range of color and beauty of form truly marvelous. I am using Mr. Peacock's exact words in describing a few of the best cut flower varieties:

John Elitch is rich, glowing crimson, shaded darker, immense flowers six inches across on stems three to four feet long. Mrs. Roosevelt is a giant decorative dahlia, very delicate pink, stems two to four feet long, flowers five to six inches across. "These two varieties are being especially grown on long, disbudded stems. Nine of either of these will make a larger showing than a dozen of any of the early chrysanthemums, also of many of the later varieties."

William Agnew is a very large brilliant red. Lyndhurst is a vivid scarlet. Orange King is a very bright, rich orange, Claribel a very bright purple.

C. W. Bruton is still the leading yellow decorative, immense flowers, many stems being four feet long.

In pink Nymphaea, shell pink, and Eureka, a fine large, deep rose, are the only ones in their shades in this class.

In white Henry Patrick is very large, pure white, on long stems, and fine, erect form. Perle d'Or is large, of the most approved chrysanthemum form.

In cactus dahlias Kriemhilde is far the best in pink, very finely formed flowers, clear, rich pink tinting lighter to the center. Victor Von Sheffen is a little lighter color and a little finer formed flower. In white Purity and Winsome were in a class by themselves, with good habit and the most beautiful form. The yellow cactus dahlias have not reached the same perfection as a cut flower as the other shades, the stem being a trifle weak, but Volker is a magnificent form of plant.

Among the reds Mars is a finely formed rich scarlet, Floradora a vivid crimson and J. H. Jackson a dark, rich velvety crimson, the plants being dwarf, of branching habit, very free bloomers and with long stiff stems.

Another feature in this popular class was the fancy section. Mrs. H. J. Jones is carmine red tipped creamy white. General Buller is rich, velvety crimson tipped pure white and showed magnificent form, very long, erect stems and most pleasing, particularly the solid color of General Buller, which is one of the richest in the entire section.

In connection with the cactus varieties Mr. Peacock considers Kriemhilde the best all-round commercial dahlia grown, which fact is fully demonstrated by the appearance of the plants at Ateo, one acre being grown for cut flowers, and there are two other blocks of one-half acre each. These plants showed up in magnificent form, the stems running proportion. A great many advertisers believe that an advertisement which does not quote price is not so strong as it might be, but that depends on the purpose of the advertisement. from two to three feet long, the rows planted four feet apart making a solid bed of one acre of this exquisite variety.

Among the show dahlias Queen of the Belgians, shell pink, A. D. Livoni, clear soft pink, and Pink Dandy, a large, long-stemmed, tipped rose pink, were the most striking.

Storm King, as usual, showed up in the best form, while the plants of John Walker made it look to be the best late white. Mr. Peacock grows these two varieties in connection, the Walker following the Storm King as the season advances.

In yellows Queen of Yellows, clear canary yellow, Queen Victoria, a richer, deeper yellow, and Sir Charles Mills, a rich golden yellow, looked far the best for commercial purposes.

The Client is a rich, magnificent crimson, while in scarlet the Apollyon is still considered the best.

The pompons made a magnificent showing, the dwarfed, branching plants being a complete sheet of bloom, all of which were very striking, but Alewine, a white suffusing a rosy light, was particularly striking as a cut flower, it being of beautiful form, a free bloomer and giving long stems.

Next to the cactus the singles are most valuable as cut flowers and Mr. Peacock states that the demand for singles is increasing, far more rapidly than for even the cactus, especially since the advent of the Century class. Twentieth Century still heads the list as the most striking on account of the lovely color combinations, combined with its size, free blooming qualities and long stems. All this class are remarkably good shippers and keepers.

Scarlet Century is a magnificent variety, very large and a vivid scarlet, but will be superseded commercially by Gorgeous, a newer seedling which has a little better form, a little richer color and longer stems.

The new crimson, Harvard, certainly rightly named, is a superb variety, while in clear pinks the Blush Century, a very delicate shell pink, and the Pink Century, probably the largest of all, measuring seven to eight inches in diameter, are of greatest value.

The Crimson Century is another fine commercial sort, it being much dwarfer than the others, branching near the ground but throwing the flowers in the greatest profusion well above the plant, on long stems.

I was very much impressed with the appearance of the new White Century; the flowers are very large, the plants growing five to six feet high, with six to eight immense flowers to a plant, on stems two to three feet long.

The Record was very striking, being of the same marking as Twentieth Century excepting that the colors are scarlet and yellow. I did not consider this of as great commercial value as the others but it is a most striking plant.

Among the new singles, what struck me most was the dark-foliaged varieties, Ami Barrillet, a rich garnet, purple foliage, and Ami Downie, a glowing crimson scarlet, with much longer stems and foliage nearly as dark as Barrillet.

Alba superba was clearly the best white, the plant being completely covered with immense, snow white flowers with long stems. The anemone are more compact flowers, of anemone shape and borne erect.

In the delicate shades most striking are Gracie, a pure white suffusing blush, and Mollie, light pink with a white disc.

Buttercup showed up in great form, the flowers of most beautiful shape, small size but borne in utmost profusion. Two rows of this variety made a bed eight feet wide and 600 feet long, a magnificent sight. St. George was a better yellow commercially as it was the clearest canary yellow, large size and long stems.

Another striking novelty was the Fairy, a beautiful rosy yellow of most unique form, long, twisted petals, with stag-horn tips. The Garlandia was also a striking variety, being of the same marking as Grandiflora but of more pleasing and brighter color.

Two of the most striking varieties seen were the new branching collarette varieties. President Viger, the original variety, showed up in great form, but Mme. Viger, a seedling, is lighter, brighter, larger and better in every way.

I regret that lack of time prevented my taking in the trial lots, among which were a number of new seedlings and new importations, particularly among the cactus varieties.

THE READERS' CORNER.

The White Fly.

In answer to "Hoosier," in the REVIEW for Aug. 31, we would say that we were troubled with the little white fly, but application of hydrocyanic acid gas as per the formula on page 736 of the REVIEW for August 17, 1905, killed every one. We did not use it quite so strong as there advised and would reduce again, for some of the tender leaves of rose geraniums and chrysanthemums were affected. The REVIEW deserves much credit for its ever-ready disposition to offer helpful suggestions for the benefit of its readers. We enjoy every page.

SHARDLOW.

Here is the formula once more: One pint sulphuric acid, one pint water; mix in one gallon butter jar. Tie up two and one-half ounces cyanide of potassium. Drop the little parcel of cyanide into the jar and walk on. Keep the ventilators closed tight all night. The above is for each 1,500 cubic feet of air space in your house. This strength will hurt no living plant, but might kill you or the cat if you stopped too long.

Taxes on Plants.

I would like to know what the law is in regard to taxes on plants in greenhouses. All whom we have heard from say that growing crops are not taxable, but our tax inquisitors say that we shall have to pay taxes, as they claim that almost everything we have is in shape to sell. We want to do what is right but we understand that others refuse to pay and will take the matter into court. If they make us all pay in our town we are all on an even footing, but other towns would have an advantage of us if they are not taxed, too. We should like to hear from florists in several states as to what the practice is as to assessing personal taxes on the stock growing in the greenhouses. W. B.

Hydrocyanic Gas.

In the REVIEW of August 31 inquiry was made as to the efficiency of hydrocyanic acid gas in the destruction of white fly. In the early part of the spring we had occasion to fumigate five houses, planted principally to tomatoes, which were badly affected with white fly. The quantity used was five ounces of potassium cyanide, one quart of sulphuric acid and one quart of water to every 4,000 cubic feet of air space. The result was a complete annihilation of all insect life, together with a considerable burning of all plants in the houses.

It would seem peculiar that the gentleman making the enquiry should have used the generally accepted formula with no results, as we simply doubled the amount of cyanide to twice the usual amount of air space. The temperature in the houses at the time of operation was 65 degrees. The resulting gas was too strong for the foliage, as shown next morning on carnations, smilax, mums and even on tomatoes.

We would suggest to the enquirer that before again making use of this very efficient fumigant he personally attend to all leakages in his glass, upon which we think the gentleman will admit with us that hydrocyanic acid gas is the only remedy for white fly. C. H. JANZEN.

MAKING MUSHROOM BEDS.

When the material has been put into proper condition, the first thing is the making up of the mushroom beds. To insure proper and even firming the best way is to spread a layer of the material about three inches thick, evenly over the bottom of the bed. Beat this moderately firm; then add another layer of about the same thickness, and so on until the desired depth has been attained. There is considerable diversity of opinion regarding the best depth to make the bed. Some prefer eight inches, but we invariably make the beds twelve inches deep and find by doing so that the larger body of material is not so apt to lose heat quickly and the beds continue to bear longer. Of course a good deal depends on the facilities at hand. With a properly equipped, well-heated mushroom house a depth of eight inches would be all right, but when the temperature is apt to run a little low the extra body of material is a big advantage. The only advantage in the shallow bed is that less material is needed, which in cases where this is hard to procure is a matter that must be taken into consideration.

We have seen good mushrooms grown in frost-proof cellars with no other heat than that given by the manure, but in this case the beds were made two feet thick and were well covered with straw. The manure that was being collected for making up other beds was brought in and dumped on the cellar floor. Here the manure was kept turned over until it was in the proper condition, but while turning was going on it was necessary to open the cellar windows far enough to let out the rank steam. The heat given off from this was sufficient to maintain a temperature of from 45 to 50 degrees, even in cold weather. This temperature made growth necessarily slow and through the coldest part of winter not many mushrooms were pulled from the beds, but in fall and spring a splendid crop was harvested. They did well up to the end of December but slacked off from that time until the beginning of March. The party who grew the mushrooms only rented the cellar from year to year, but with a cellar like this, where it is intended to make a permanent business of mushroom culture, it would pay to install a heating plant.

LIGHT IN CUCUMBER HOUSES.

Among cucumber growers in certain localities of Massachusetts, there is and has been for many years a practice of double roofing as a means of keeping out the cold and economizing in fuel. In this method of construction, pieces of moulding are fastened to the inside of the sash bars which constitute the roof and sides of the house, these holding in place a second layer of glass. This forms a double roof and sides to the house, with a 1½-inch or 2-inch air space between. Some constructors do not carry the double roofing to the ridge, but stop about one-half or two-thirds of the way up, thus leaving the upper part of the roof near the ridge with a single layer of glass, while the lower part is provided with two layers. Certain growers who make use of this plan maintain that it is impossible to grow plants in any other way, while others cannot be induced to use it.

We have observed a great many crops of cucumbers grown under both of these methods of construction with marked differences in results. The objection to the double roof system is the collection of moisture and dust, which shuts out the light, and we have observed more than once houses constructed in this manner which it was almost impossible to see through. The double roof system is also costly, the glass becomes more readily corroded, and, while it may keep out a certain amount of cold, the advantage is, according to our observation, not so great as that which would result from differences in exposure or from the use of an economical boiler.

Cucumbers are especially susceptible to light and even under the most favorable conditions in our latitude they not infrequently suffer from the want of it during the winter months. From November to February they should receive all the light possible, not only for their foliage, but for their fruit; and any method in the construction of greenhouses for cucumbers which fails to take this factor into consideration is radically wrong. We have seen many instances in double glass houses where the plants were unhealthy from the lack of light. Their leaves possessed no texture nor healthy green color, their petioles were small and elongated, their fruit stunted in its growth and lacked color, and the plant's degree of maturity is not what it would be if grown under better light conditions. We have seen instances in cucumber houses where plants which had been shaded for a few hours each day by some adjoining building showed a loss of fifty per cent in maturity.—Bulletin of Hatch Experiment Station.

VEGETABLE FORCERS.

The REVIEW will appreciate the courtesy of its readers if they will send us the names and addresses of those in their vicinity who are growing vegetables under glass.

A WISCONSIN PLACE.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of the establishment of Louis Otto, at Neenah, Wis., where he does a good trade. The town is small, having a population of only 5,954 by the last census, but it is a prosperous community and all business there is thriving. Mr. Otto has about 7,000 feet of glass and grows a general stock, for he does a large cemetery trade. One of his difficulties was a satisfactory water supply until he put in a Diamond windmill, supplied by the Temple Pump Co., 17 West Fifteenth place, Chicago, which gives him a very satisfactory supply from his own well.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

A good frost would do more than any other influence to put life into the market. Saturday saw some improvement, the premonitory symptoms of a permanent revival. Stock is less in quantity and though prices do not advance they hold steady and there is little left when the day closes.

Roses are of good quality. Brides and Maids have commanded $4 per hundred at times and Beauties occasionally rise to $20, but there are plenty of them all the way down to $1 a hundred. Carnations are still limited in supply. Asters, good ones, are in demand. There is no diminution in the flood of hydrangeas and gladioli. The general tone is improving. Sales on Saturday were above the average in quantity, and with the rapid return of the flower buyers from their summer homes comes the inevitable demand that will again start the retail and wholesale wheels in motion.

Club Night.

The club meeting Monday night drew a fair house, notwithstanding the storm. The exhibits were large and excellent. A certificate of merit was awarded the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, for a grand display of thirteen varieties of phlox, fifteen varieties of dahlias, four varieties of helianthus and eight varieties of hardy asters.

H. A. Dreer, Philadelphia, sent a fine exhibit of helianthus, phlox, hybrid delphiniums and liatris, for which a certificate of merit was awarded.

Bobbink & Atkins showed twenty-five varieties of phlox, four varieties of helianthus, three varieties of boltonia, one sedum, two lobelias, three varieties rudbeckia, two varieties helenium and three varieties of hardy asters, for which they received honorable mention. H. Beaulieu exhibited six varieties of dahlias.

Messrs. Kakuda and Fellouris were elected members of the club. Clarence Saltford's resignation was accepted and Messrs. E. V. Hallock, C. Wayne Ward, W. H. Donohoe, F. Boulon, Jr., and William N. Reed were proposed for membership.

The members who visited the capital city were called upon for their experiences and criticisms. A vote of thanks to the Washington club for the magnificent hospitality of its members was unanimously given.

"Bobby" Schultz, of Madison, gave a very humorous account of his experiences with the Nugent punch and Washington water, closing with some classic poetry of his own composition. A. H. Langjahr referred feelingly to his experiences in hotels, woods and other places. Mr. Weathered said it was the most delightful convention he had ever enjoyed and that the thirst for education displayed by the younger members was phenomenal. J. B. Nugent told how he was so successful in catering. A. J.

Guttman and C. H. Totty declared it was the best time they ever had in their lives, to which Mr. Manda added his endorsement. The newspaper men each had something to say and the question box and Mr. Beaulieu occupied the attention for the balance of a very enjoyable evening.

The next meeting will be canna and chrysanthemum night and with good weather there should be an attendance worthy of the membership. The bowling club will then commence operations.

BOSTON.The Market.

Conditions are not materially changed since our last report. Roses continue in abundant supply. Some of the smaller sizes of Brides and Maids are cleared at extremely low prices. The top grades bring from $4 to $6. Kaiserins are very good, without any change in price. Liberty is coming in better and the finest sell at higher prices. Beauties are not yet of very good color. While the best realize $15 to $25, short-stemmed stock brings very little. Carnations continue scarce, the average price being $2 to $3.

Drenching rains on September 3 and 4 temporarily reduced the aster supply and made prices boom. Bright weather has brought along other batches and a good supply is now forthcoming. Prices vary from 50 cents to $2. Gladioli are coming in less plentifully and outside of a few longiflorum and speciosum lilies and valley, few other flowers are seen. No change in green stock. The big decoration by Galvin at the new Siegel store helped the market considerably September 11.

Horticultural Society.

The big fall shew, opening on September 14 and lasting four days, promises to be even better in most respects than its predecessors. Numerous entries have been received in all departments. All the halls and basements will be needed to stage exhibits. A full report will appear in our next issue.

At a meeting of the board of trustees on September 9 an appropriation of $6,700 was recommended for premiums for 1906. An invitation was extended to the American Peony Society to hold its annual convention and show in connection with the local peony exhibition in June, 1906.

A committee was appointed to prepare a preliminary schedule to cover the spring exhibition in March, 1906. This will be printed and in the hands of all who desire it during the show this week. Every effort will be made to have a record-breaking exhibition when the American Rose Society meets, as it did last March.

Various Notes.

A delegation of some seventy-five gentlemen, including members of the Horticultural Society, State Board of Agriculture and Boston Market Gardeners' Association, made a journey by special invitation to the New Hampshire College at Durham on September 12. Free transportation was provided and lunch served at the college. A large number of variety tests at the Experimental Station grounds proved interesting, as did the facilities for instruction offered by the new agricultural building and greenhouses, to say nothing of other features of the college work. Boston was reached on the return journey at 7:30, after a most delightful day's outing.

The entire floral decoration for the opening of the Henry Siegel Co.'s mammoth new store in Boston on September 11, was entrusted to T. F. Galvin. An enormous amount of material was used to produce the best possible effects in all departments of the store and the vast crowds who attended were unstinted in their praise of the way in which the decorations were carried out.

N. F. McCarthy & Co.'s fall auction sales started on September 12, when peonies, field-grown carnations and Boston ferns were the principal articles disposed of. All brought good prices. Sales will continue every Tuesday and Friday until December 1.

The next meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club, on September 19, promises to be the banner one in its history. Numerous applications for membership have already been received and more are promised. There will be vacation experiences from a number of members, music and refreshments. An attendance of 100 is expected and all who come are promised a delightful and profitable evening. The club's membership will receive a big lift toward the 200 mark as a result of this meeting.

The Boston Sunday Globe, of September 10, contained a lengthy illustrated sketch of John K. Alexander, of West Bridgewater, and his well-known dahlia farm, where 100,000 plants are now in bloom.

J. K. M. L. Farquhar returned the past week from a Canadian trip.

W. N. CRAIG.

CHICAGO.The Market.

Business has shown quite a little improvement during the past week. Receipts have increased in many lines, so that no fancy prices are obtained, but the market is clearing up better on most lines than it has for some time. The principal exception to this relates to the asters. Receipts are tremendously heavy and a very large part of the stock is of first-class quality; indeed, there are so many good asters that they make low average prices and the poor stock is almost unsalable. They also hurt the sale of carnations, which seem unusually abundant.

American Beauties are in first-class shape. Receipts are quite heavy but the demand is such that prices are well held. Many growers are getting fair Brides and Bridesmaids and quality is steadily improving. The shipping demand takes all the good roses but the short stuff has to be sacrificed. Most of the growers

The first flower show held in Dubuque opened September 7, at Temple hall. Classes were provided with premiums for dahlias, asters and miscellaneous flowers. who planted Richmond are now cutting from it. Most of the stock is still very short and not in large demand for that reason, but the growers, the wholesalers, the retailers and the public like it. If it lives up to its reputation as a winter bloomer its future is assured.

Dahlias are now coming in heavily but find slow sale. Gladioli are always to be had but the quantity received is lessening. Pansies are noted on many wholesale counters. A few lancifolium lilies still come in, but there are few Harrisii. There was a flurry in valley last week but the demand quickly subsided, and some shipments brought in from the east failed of a market. This week valley is a glut.

Thus far there is nothing doing in "green goods." The autumn decorations have not yet commenced. When they do, there will be plenty of material. One or two early jobs have called for wild smilax, which can be had on a few days' notice.

Death of John C. Ure.

The craft has lost another of its veterans. John C. Ure died on Sunday, September 10, aged 79 years. He was a pioneer in the trade in Chicago, his business experience dating from the early days of the city.

Mr. Ure was born, and educated to gardening, in England. He came to America while yet a young man and conducted a prosperous establishment when the business in the west was in its infancy and when little other than bedding stock was grown, but in greater variety than is the case today. He was a thorough plantsman and possessed of a wide knowledge on horticultural subjects.

As with many of the old timers, Mr. Ure's business had its ups and downs but none was more actively identified with trade affairs than he. Early flower show history would show him among the most active figures and, indeed, he was an exhibitor at last year's show, having never lost his interest. In early days flower show management was often in his hands and for years he was identified with the work of the State Board of Agriculture and took a leading part in horticultural affairs throughout Illinois and at the state fairs.

During the World's Fair he was in charge of the grounds and decorations of the Illinois state building and it is well remembered that Illinois had reason to be proud of his work at that time.

Of recent years Mr. Ure's strength had somewhat limited his activity but he still conducted the establishment in Edgewater where he has been located for so many years. He had maintained his membership in the Chicago Florists' Club and in the Horticultural Society of Chicago, but had allowed his membership in many other organizations to lapse. Mr. Ure was one of the oldest Masons in Chicago. He leaves a widow and several children, one son being associated with him in his business. A daughter is Mrs. James Hartshorne, of Joliet.

A special meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club was held September 12 at the office of the Benthley-Coatsworth Co., Vice-president J. P. Risch occupying the chair. Resolutions were adopted and a floral tribute ordered sent to the funeral, which was held Tuesday afternoon at the family residence, 2843 Evanston avenue, and attended by a large number of those in the trade. Interment was at Rose Hill.

The portrait of Mr. Ure, printed on the opposite page, is from his latest photograph, taken March 23, 1893, when he was actively engaged in the World's Fair work.

At Wittbold's.

The George Wittbold Co. has pulled down the ends of all the houses west of the store on Buckingham place and is putting up a show house to match the one running east from the store. When finished it will give them the best street frontage in Chicago. The new office building is nearly ready for occupancy. The boys report retail trade good for summer and the wholesale end is big, many orders on for fall shipment. Two men are on the road. They have an unusually large stock of Bostons, kentias and miscellaneous decorative stock. Like many others, they have practically closed out on latanias.

At Edgebrook they are cutting Richmond rose and say the plants have done especially well. In the store they like it better than Liberty. Killarney, they say, is a great keeper. Going into cut flowers will enable the company to widen its field, to take in the trade that needs cuttings and plants of roses, carnations, mums, etc. They already have a large stock of hardy stuff for their retail trade and will eventually be able to supply the wholesale demand.

Florists' Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club will hold its first meeting for the season at Handel hall this evening. E. G. Hill, of Richmond, is expected to be present and always has something interesting to say. Flower show matters will be discussed and a large attendance is expected.

J. B. Deamud had the first mums of the season September 11, Lady Fitzwygram at $2 a dozen, but they were slow sale. Clematis paniculata at 40 to 50 cents a bunch was liked better.

Visitors.

Among the visitors since last issue were: Wm. F. Gude, of Washington, en route home from Colorado and enthusiastic over mountain scenery and the profuse use of flowers he noted everywhere; Geo. A. Kuhl and wife, Pekin, Ill., en route home from the convention and a two weeks' stay at Jersey shore resorts; Paul Berkowitz, Philadelphia, the popular partner of H. Bayersdorfer; D. C. Noble, Columbia City, Ind., who was getting a line on the cost of 12,000 feet of glass he plans to put up early in the spring; H. F. Greve, Dallas, Tex., who recently opened the Dallas Floral Bazaar; S. J. McMichael, Findlay, O., the vegetable plant grower; J. Stern, Philadelphia, selling supplies, including a green status wreath which takes well; Vincent Gorley and R. Windt, St. Louis, the former on his way home from the convention.

DETROIT.

The Market.

A number of very sad accidents the past week resulted in business in the way of funeral work being very brisk. A number of the florists are also busy preparing their exhibits for the state fair.

Fairly good carnations are to be seen in large quantities. Roses are still very poor, especially Maids, which are hardly fit to sell. White asters are still holding their own at from $1 to $2 per hundred, but, while good purple, lavender and pink sell well, it is almost impossible to dispose of short stuff. "Green" is plentiful, except smilax.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club was held Wednesday evening, September 6. President-elect Wm. Dilger was escorted to the chair by A. Bomb to assume the duties of his office. After calling on the retiring president, Robert Watson, for a few remarks, Mr. Dilger thanked the members for the honor conferred on him and said that with the able assistance of the other officers and members of the club, he will see to it that the coming year is a banner one. Among other things, he said he hoped in the future more use would be made of the question box, remarking that very often what look like the most absurd questions elicit the greatest amount of discussion. He also spoke of appointing a committee to arrange for a series of essays and lectures on different subjects, also to get up a few entertainments to take place during the year, thereby getting the ladies and sweethearts of the members better acquainted with one another. Mr. Dilger also thought it a very good plan to have a show of the plants and flowers in season, about every month or so, similar to those held in other cities.

This being the first meeting since the convention, a number of the delegates responded with a few remarks. Of course, Washington is a very beautiful and interesting city, the fine shrubbery in the parks exciting much comment, but it seems that the Botanical Gardens made a very poor impression on the visitors; they are far behind those of European cities. Instead of every plant being a specimen, there are a lot of inferior plants, some in pots or tubs a number of sizes too large, rubbers with no leaves, etc.

The only fault found with the trade exhibition was its being scattered, for which no one blamed the Washington florists; they certainly did all in their power to make the trip one long to be remembered. Those who attended the barbecue will vouch for this.

The reception accorded the visitors at Baltimore was also spoken of. One of the most noticeable features in that progressive city is that even the poorest families seem to devote a great deal of time and attention to keeping the surroundings looking nice, many pretty beds and window boxes being seen.

A resolution of thanks was tendered the florists of the cities visited, not forgetting the fine lunch at the Quaker City.

In speaking of the big show to be held in Boston in March, everyone was very much interested.

Various Notes.

Lanceifolium lilies and Bostons were used to good advantage in decorating Sullivan's window this week.

News has reached here that Fred. M. Walker is being returned to this country insane from confinement on false charges in a Panama prison. Mr. Walker had charge of the grounds and greenhouses at the State Insane Asylum, at Pontiac, for many years and was well known to florists in this vicinity.

The greenhouses and downtown store of the late H. G. Flammer are being offered for sale by Mrs. Flammer.

S. S. Skidelsky has assumed complete control of the sale of a beautiful pink sport of Enehantress, originating with B. Schroeter.

Miss Josephine Mero has returned from a seven weeks' eastern trip.

Henry C. Fruek, gardener to Joseph Berry, Grosse Pointe, has a new seedling fern said to be very fine. It has a growth similar to Wittboldii, but is of a very graceful habit.

Mr. Smith, gardener at Newberry's, Grosse Pointe, received a very bad sprain of his left ankle while alighting from a car on Labor day. He will be laid up three or four weeks.

Visitors: Paul Berkowitz and E. J. Faneourt, Philadelphia; Fred C. Weber, Jr., St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

For the first week in September business was slow. One or two small weddings and some funeral work was about all that was going on about town. These conditions will surely improve in the next week or so, as most of the society folks are returning from their summer vacations. Most of the retail stores are looking fine, for the cleaning, painting and papering is about completed, and everybody is looking forward to a good fall trade.

At the wholesale houses stock is good in all lines. Asters are beginning to give out with most of the growers; still enough are in for the demand. Roses are looking much better than a week ago. Some extra good Bride, Kaiserin, Chatenay and Carnot are in the market. Of Beauties there are enough but not of extra fine quality. Carnations are also beginning to look better but are still too small and short-stemmed to sell well. Valley is of extra quality. Other flowers in the market are gladioli and tuberose stalks. Everything that is wanted in "greens" is in the market at usual prices.

Various Notes.

Visitors the past week were J. Stern, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Schloss, of Schloss Bros., New York.

T. W. Guy, at one time one of our local growers, now of St. James, Mo., spent Monday here in company with his son, E. W. Guy.

Rudie Windt spent the past week traveling through Illinois and stopping a few days in Chicago.

Vincent Gorley, one of the last of the conventionists to return, reports that he had the best trip of his life. He visited all the large eastern places, returning by way of Chicago. He learned a great deal in a business line from this trip.

Wm. Jordan, who is running the old Jordan greenhouse on Union avenue, reports that he will retire from the growing business after this month. He has disposed of the old houses and the ground and will enter the retail business before the winter months are over.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Ellison are expected home this week from their northern summer home. Arthur Ellison, who had charge of the place all summer, will then take a few days' much needed rest.

Henry Lohrenz has his new place at Park and Mississippi avenues looking at its best. It is one of the attractive spots in that neighborhood.

R. J. Windler, who recently opened up at Grand and Shenandoah avenues, is making a very attractive display in his show window.

Bowling.

The florist bowlers will enter the Palace Bowling League this fall. The seven bowlers selected are A. Y. Ellison, C. A. Kuehn, Theo. Miller, Carl Beyer, Robt. Meinhardt, Wm. Adels and J. J. Beneke. This team will average 850 per game and should make a good showing.

At the big social bowling night on September 4 it was noticed that some good timber in the bowling line is among the florists who attended. Among those who should make good bowlers are W. J. Pileher, John Steidel, J. F. Ammann, Herman Weber, Geo. Angermueller, Theo. Klockenkemper and Mr. Braun. Among the old-timers who still showed good speed were Emil Schray, C. C. Sanders, Chas. Juengel and Frank Fillmore. These were all at one time prominent members of the bowling club, who never missed a night. They should be back in the club, as Dr. Osler is not looking for any of them yet.

The bowling club had ten men on the alleys on Monday night. Two teams were made up for a match of three games. The night was very cool and good scores were made by Carl Beyer and Robt. Meinhardt. The scores were as follows:

CULTURE of Grafted Roses sent on receipt of 25c.—FLORISTS' REVIEW.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The market shows steady improvement. Asters, while diminishing with some growers, are increasing with others, so that their numbers are still large. Dahlias are coming into town in improved form. The fancies are finer than this market has ever seen before. Tea roses of improved quality are abundant, Bridesmaid showing the greatest advance in quality. Beauties are in good demand. The local growers are nearly all cutting a few now. Their flowers are of excellent quality, chiefly medium and short stems. Receipts of carnations are steadily increasing, but there are not enough to meet the demand.

Valley is in fair supply, the best selling well. The first single violets have made their appearance. Pennock Bros. had their first shipment last Saturday. Gladioli are plentiful. Hydrangeas do not sell now. Cosmos has made its appearance; so has wild smilax.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club goes to Ateo on the 1 p. m. train from the foot of Market street, Saturday, September 16. Don't miss it. Take the "missus" and you will make no mistake.

Kriemhilde promises to be the coming pink dahlia this season. It is a beauty.

A bed of Dahlia Ami Barrillet seen at the Ateo station made a fine effect, the single scarlet flowers contrasting beautifully with the deep, rich foliage.

William J. Moore is receiving fine dahlias from William Bassett's Bellevue nurseries, Hammonton, N. J. He now has Lindhurst, scarlet; Perle d'Or, white, and Mme. Moreau, pink, and expects Kriemhilde shortly.

The Dutch bulbs are here in fine form, keeping the seedsmen on the jump to get the orders out.

The Leo Niessen Co. reports an excellent supply of choice tea roses, with a good demand, also the first shipment of wild smilax.

A local daily stated carnations could not be had on Labor day to decorate the McKinley statue. The error of this statement was forcibly impressed on me at 1432 South Penn square.

William E. McKissick reports a good demand for high grade asters.

Frank D. Myers enjoyed a breathing spell last month at Eaglesmere.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. report the following visitors: W. Kalisch and F. C. Weber, St. Louis; Wm. Rehm and Harry Papworth, New Orleans. This is a lively time with the firm. They state 600 cases of goods are expected this week. All their packers are kept busy right along.

John Wilson and Walter Davis joined the forces of the Leo Niessen Co. last week.

M. Rice & Co. report working overtime to get their orders out promptly.

In Girard College notes last week I should have written crassula, not crasus.

Club Meeting.

The September meeting of the Florists' Club was fairly well attended and full of interest. President John Westcott occupied the chair. Edwin Lonsdale spoke of the horticultural progress of the country, dwelling on the new ideas being developed at Washington under the government experts. John Burton urged that the club send a committee to the national capital to inquire into experiments being made with the fertilizing bacteria, fungicides, insecticides and other useful aids to the florist, and report to the club. He promised to make a motion to that effect later.

Reports of committees were read and accepted. The handsome trophies won at Washington by our bowlers and marksmen were displayed.

The Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., made a fine exhibit of some dozen varieties of their canna blooms. Unfortunately Antoine Wintzer, the speaker of the evening, was detained at home by a heavy cold. L. K. Peacock, of Ateo, N. J., made a superb exhibit of dahlias, including Twentieth Century and other fine singles of the Century type. A large rose pink, Victor Von Scheffen, never before exhibited, was much admired. Mr. Peacock, who staged his exhibit in person, gave an entertaining account of the varieties shown, their habits and peculiarities, closing with a cordial invitation to the club to visit his dahlia farm. This invitation was promptly accepted. A committee consisting of G. C. Watson and L. K. Peacock was appointed to make arrangements for the trip. They selected Saturday, September 16, as the day. The 1 p. m. train from the foot of Market street will carry the party to Ateo.

The nominations for officers were as follows: President, Thomas B. Meehan; vice-president, Fred Hahman; secretary, Edwin Lonsdale; treasurer, J. William Colflesh. The election is to be held at the October meeting.

After the regular meeting a bowling jubilee was held to christen the cups. David Rust brewed the punch in a way that proved his apprenticeship, served under John Westcott, had borne fruit. Everybody said "Here's how" with a happy smile. P. J. Lynch acted as master of ceremonies and also entertained the members with a variety of songs. Edward A. Stroud recited "The Watermelon" in negro dialect, making a hit. After singing "Auld Lang Syne" the party broke up in high good humor.

The Ideal Salesman.

The REVIEW realizes that the position of a cut flower and plant salesman is one of importance to the grower, to the wholesaler, to the retailer and to the consumer. The REVIEW believes that a high standard among the salesmen will do much to promote the interests of all those who buy or sell cut flowers or plants, and to promote harmony among them. The REVIEW therefore proposes a prize essay competition similar to that held by the S. A. F. under the following conditions:

The subject of the essay shall be "The Ideal Salesman."

Each competitor shall mail his essay, unsigned, on or before September 30, 1905, to Phil, care of any of the wholesale cut flower houses in this city.

Each essay must be unsigned, accompanied by the writer's name and address in a sealed envelope. This envelope will not be opened until the awards have been made.

The essays and sealed envelopes will be numbered when received and the essays will be submitted to a competent judge. His awards will be announced in the Review of October 12.

The first prize will be $10, the second prize $5.

It is especially desired that the essays be clear, concise and to the point.

THE REVIEW will send Montgomery's "Culture of Grafted Roses" on receipt of 25c.

FERGUS FALLS, MINN.—Jacob Wolf died here September 4. He was at one time a very successful florist at Perham, but lost his property and his reason.

MITCHELL, S. D.—During the season E. C. Newbury has put up three new houses for roses, three for pot plants and one for lettuce. He now has 25,000 feet of glass.

WINONA, MINN.—Fuhlbruegge Bros. bought the greenhouses until recently operated by the Winona Floral Co. They will run these in connection with their former plant.

THE DAHLIA CHRYSANTHEMUM

Very much cheaper, far more effective than Chrysanthemums in many ways, particularly decorations. A trial shipment direct from Atco, N. J., (where our grower, Mr. L. K. Peacock, has 130 acres of the choicest Dahlias under cultivation) will convince you of the wonderful merits of this variety.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

THE government report estimates the corn crop at 2,625,000,000 bushels, a new record.

THE Louisiana crop of Creole onion seed is reported considerably below that of last year.

STEAMER manifests show considerable quantities of German clover and alfalfa seeds arriving at New York.

SWEET peas and onion seed are likely to be the scarcest crops, proportionately, of all the California seed products.

CROPS of both peas and beans are reported to be getting shorter the longer experts continue to investigate the conditions prevailing.

THERE were only five cases of bulbs on the last boat from Bermuda. A few French bulbs are still arriving, but Dutch bulbs are the principal item now.

THE U. S. Department of Agriculture has issued as Bulletin No. 83 "The Vitality of Buried Seeds," by J. W. T. Duvel, which will be of interest to seedsmen.

CARROT seed is to be delivered in full this year, according to reports. Carrot goes farther than some other seeds and this intelligence may not be very important.

VISITED CHICAGO: H. W. Johns, of Sioux City Seed & Nursery Co., on his way to the company's bean growing station in Michigan; Harry Claire, of S. L. Allen, Philadelphia.

THE shortness of the onion set crop will show up after the deliveries from the fields to winter quarters have been made. The crop at Chicago is far below last year's product from an equal acreage.

M. J. HENRY, of Vancouver, says that "Probably very few eastern people appreciate that British Columbia can and does grow quite a few varieties of seeds as good or better than some other localities. British Columbia has the record of the cleanest timothy seed in Canada and garden peas are free from the pea weevil or beetle. We grow good plump radish, carrot, parsnip and cabbage seed and orders for native tree seeds, such as Douglas fir, mammoth cedar and blue spruce, are continually coming in from all over the world."

CLUCAS CO. ASSIGNS.

The Clucas & Boddington Co., wholesale dealers in seeds, bulbs, nursery stock and garden requisites at 131 W. Twenty-third street, New York, with a nursery at Sparkill, N. Y., made an assignment September 7, to Frank H. Henry, of Henry & Lee. The business was started in 1895 by Robert W. Clucas, and incorporated January 26, 1897, with capital stock of $3,000, which was increased May 3, 1905, to $50,000. Robert W. Clucas is president. Arthur T. Boddington withdrew from the company some years ago and is not affected in any way. In 1902 the company purchased nursery property at Sparkill for $11,500, and has since spent considerable on its improvement. The assignee has not yet given out a statement of assets and liabilities, but says he will be ready to do so in a few days.

BRASLAN'S PLANS.

The forces of the Braslan Seed Growers' Co., San Jose, Cal., have been strengthened by the accession of Russell L. Woldenberg, who is to be assistant general manager, and Joseph W. Edmundson, who is to be superintendent and inspector of crops. In announcing that these two young men had joined the company, C. P. Braslan said to the San Jose Mercury that: "The demands of business in this line are increasing so rapidly that I find it expedient to make arrangements to meet the situation. For the year 1906 we will materially enlarge the acreages in various lines of seeds that we are now growing. This arises from the increased demand made upon us, not only by the United States, but by Europe. It is perhaps not amiss to say that the acreage of this company next season will be the largest of any seed concern in the world, comprising about 4,000 acres."

DEATH OF S. P. REES.

Word has been received from Long Beach, Cal., of the death of Sam P. Rees, of the firm of Rees & Compere. He went to Los Angeles on August 30 and transacted his business. He then went to a hotel and said that as he did not feel well he would like to lie down for a few minutes before starting for home. A brief while afterward he was found dead of heart failure in the room assigned him.

Mr. Rees was born in Wales more than sixty years ago. Coming to America he drifted westward and located at Los Angeles in 1885, in the real estate business. A few years ago he formed a partnership with Mr. Compere in the bulb and seed business and subsequently removed to Long Beach, where they built up a big trade, becoming the world's largest growers of freesia bulbs. This was their specialty. A photograph reproduced in the REVIEW of April 6, showed the extent of their fields. The accompanying picture, in which both Mr. Rees and Mr. Compere appear, shows but a four place decimal fraction of what their business in freesia-growing has become. Oxalis is another of their specialties, but they grow in a general way all California bulbs and supply many jobbers throughout the east. Each partner was born with a love for the soil, and the life and work at Long Beach was exactly suited to them. The business will, of course, go on uninterrupted. Mr. Rees left a wife, two daughters and two sons.

Mr. Compere Mr. Rees.
Messrs. Rees and Compere in their Freesia Fields at Long Beach, Cal.

FRENCH SEED CROPS.

The crop of beet seed was good in the neighborhood of Paris, but is very bad in the centre, where, however, the stock is a good one. In the south the crop is poor and the growers are very disappointed.

Carrots seem to be pretty satisfactory. Chicory and endive will be very good in the neighborhood of Paris and pretty good in the south. But in the centre it will be bad, in consequence of the great heat. The rains of the month have not been sufficient, the soil has been dry and that will not be without a bad effect.

The crop of beans is better than last year's, but will not be very important.

Lettuce of all varieties and in all parts of the country will give the best of crops; the crop is very good.

The parsley crop is moderate.

The product of onion and leek will be pretty small in consequence of the reduction of the plantation.

The crop of peas has been good. The purchaser does not need to hurry in placing his orders.

The radish crop is moderate in the neighborhood of Paris, but exceedingly bad in the south, and in the centre there is no crop at all. One report says that the crop in Holland and Germany has been favorable, but this information is yet to be verified.

Salsify has been good in France, as well as in the other countries. There is a very good demand and prices are high, in consequence of many purchases for speculation.

CUSTOMS DECISIONS.

Following are such decisions as interest the seed trade, made public by the U. S. Board of Appraisers under date of September 7:

CANARY SEED.—Protest of S. L. Jones & Co. against the assessment of duty by the collector of customs at the port of San Francisco.

On the authority of Nordlinger v. United States (T. D. 24976), the Board overruled the protest claiming canary seed, classified under paragraph 254, tariff act of 1897, to be free of duty under paragraph 656.

VETCH SEED.—Protest of Joseph Breck & Sons against the assessment of duty by the collector of customs at the port of Boston.

The merchandise consisted of the seed of sand or winter vetch (Vicia villosa), classified as seeds not specially provided for under paragraph 254, tariff act of 1897. On the authority of T. D. 21762, the Board overruled the protest, claiming free entry under paragraph 656.

PANDANUS SEEDS.—Protest of F. B. Vandegrift & Co. against the assessment of duty by the collector of customs at the port of New York.

Certain pandanus seeds, classified under paragraph 254, tariff act of 1897, relating to seeds not specially provided for, were claimed to be free of duty under paragraph 622 as palm nuts. Protest overruled.

WILD ASPARAGUS SEED.—Protest of J. L. Hopkins & Co. against the assessment of duty by the collector of customs at the port of New York.

Certain wild asparagus seed, classified under paragraph 254, tariff act of 1897, as seed not specially provided for, were claimed to be free of duty under paragraph 548, relating to drugs, including, among others, "seeds aromatic, and seeds of morbid growth." There being no evidence showing the seed to contain any aromatic principle, and as they were clearly not of "morbid growth," the importers' contention was overruled.

KALE SEED.—Protest of Wakem & McLaughlin against the assessment of duty by the collector of customs at the port of Chicago. The importers contend that an importation of kale seed, classified under the provision for seeds of all kinds not specially provided for in paragraph 254, tariff act of 1897, should have been classified free of duty under paragraph 656, relating to flower and grass seeds not specially provided for. Protest overruled. Kale seed is not mentioned by name in paragraph 656, and there is no evidence which would place it in the category of flower or grass seeds. "Kale" appears to be a term used loosely in Scotland to cover cabbage in general, and by extension any kind of greens; and when used specifically, both there and elsewhere, refers to "any variety of cabbage with curled or wrinkled leaves not forming compact heads like the common cabbage."—L. Waite, G. A.

RING OFF.

Can you advise a retail florist what to do when a cheap female customer calls over the phone and asks if you will send her a wreath frame and some moss, that she wants to make a wreath for a friend who is dead? STILES CO.

BOSTON FERNS AND ASPARAGUS.

Can I grow Boston and asparagus ferns in a house used to grow bedding plants? The temperature is as low as 42 degrees. Also, can I get blooms on cyclamens in May from seed that is sown in September? C. G.

Forty-two or even 45 degrees is too low to grow either of these plants. There will be no profit in it. They will only exist. The nephrolepis is a most accommodating fern and, considering they were natives of Central America, they endure and keep healthy in a much lower temperature than would be supposed. The asparagus (presumably plumosus is meant) is also from a warm climate, but exists in good health in a temperature of 50 degrees. Forty-two is altogether too low. They would stand still.

No, you cannot sow cyclamen seed this month and get any size to your plants by next May. September is the month to sow cyclamen and those plants are expected to bloom a year from next November and December.

Now I want, in the kindest feeling, to tell C. G. that I am surprised that a commercial florist would be so careless as to speak of "Boston and asparagus ferns." We expect Aunt Maria, from the country, when she visits the city florist, to use such nomenclature because she has a red-hot poker plant, as well as a beefsteak geranium, but the commercial florist should lead in calling our plants by their correct names and the asparagus is no more allied to the great fern order than is a cauliflower. When Writing Advertisers.

TORONTO.

The Market.

Trade during the past week has been of about the usual September character, with nothing unusual about it. Quite a number of small weddings have taken place, but none of them called for more than a few small bouquets. Considerable funeral work has been on the go, but most of the pieces were small.

Asters and gladioli are shortening considerably, while roses and carnations appear to be coming very slowly. All the growers report the stock looking well and blooms will be more plentiful in a short time. Geo. Allin, of Toronto Junction, is sending in some very nice carnations and Beauties, although the cut is limited.

The Fall Exhibition.

The exhibition brought in the largest attendance of out-of-town visitors that has yet been recorded. The competition in the floral department was keen. W.
A. Adams, of Buffalo, acted as judge for the floral designs and cut flowers. Jos.
Bennett, of Montreal, was judge of plants and plant arrangements. The following is a list of the awards:

Bouquet, hand or bridal, first, the Rosary;
second, J. H. Dunlop; third, J. S. Simmons.
Funeral design, flat, not to exceed fourteen inches, first, J. S. Simmons; second, W. Jay & Son; third, Holland.
Funeral harp, not to exceed thirty-six inches finished, first, Jay; second, Dunlop; third, Manton Bros.
Floral design for table, first, Simmons; second, Jay; third, Dunlop.
Best arranged basket of cut flowers, first,
Simmons; second, Dunlop.

It might be mentioned in this connection that J. S. Simmons was ruled out on his 36-inch harp by having the base, which was a flat mat, thirty-nine inches. The design was an elegant piece of work, and the judge made the statement privately afterwards that he would have awarded it first had it been within the required measurements. Holland, the Queen street florist, put in a harp which was three inches too high, and which was also ruled out.

In roses and carnations, J. H. Dunlop took first and Manton Bros. second, being the only two exhibitors in this class.

In dahlias the winners were Wm. Rennie, Steele-Briggs Co. and J. H. Lock.

For collection of cannas Wm. Rennie was first.

In annuals the largest winners were Chas.
Scott, Wm. Calvin, J. W. Stockdale and Jas.
Ogilvie.

J. H. Lock's new aster, Kate Lock, carried off the red tickets in the aster line.

A magnificent collection of sweet peas was exhibited by Mrs. Edgar Johnston, Lennoxville, Que., and carried off the red ticket.

In perennials and shrubs Wm. Rennie, Manton
Bros., Chas. Scott, Steele-Briggs Co. and Peter
Murray were the principal winners.

In lilies Grainger & Co. and Manton Bros. were winners.

The best collections of cut flowers were those of Grainger & Co., Peter Murray, Manton Bros. and Chas. Scott.

In plants and plant arrangements Exhibition park won the following: Both first and second on twelve stove and greenhouse plants; second on caladiums; first on crotons, dracaenas, twenty-four ferns, Begonia Rex, specimen flowering plants; second on crotons, forty foliage plants, twelve tuberous begonias, palms and cycads;
first on orchid collection.

W. Jay won second on fifty ferns; first on tuberous begonias; third on foliage plants.

Steele-Briggs Seed Co. was second on twenty-four ferns.

Thos. Manton was fourth on twelve stove and greenhouse plants, forty foliage plants; first on specimen fern, fern never exhibited before; second on flowering plants and large group.

Allan Gardens was second on twelve crotons; third on twelve greenhouse plants; first on twelve flowering plants; third on three stove and greenhouse specimens; first on six crotons; second on twelve dracaenas; third on specimen fern; second on twelve foliage plants and begonias; first on geraniums; second on specimen fern; first on large group.

Central Prison was first on twelve caladiums; third on six crotons, twelve crotons; first on specimen fern, six adiantums, forty foliage plants, twelve foliage plants, one foliage plant, palms and cycads; second on collection of orchids.

D. Robertson was second on six adiantums; third on forty foliage plants; fourth on large group.

Government house was second on twelve greenhouse plants, three greenhouse plants; fourth on six crotons; third on twelve draca-enas; third on specimen fern; fourth on foliage plants; third on begonias, palms and cycads, and large group.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

THE American Association of Cemetery Superintendents meets at Washington, D. C., next week.

THE Southern Railway is endeavoring to secure the establishment of a number of additional nurseries in its territory.

E. ALBERTSON, Bridgeport, Ind., president of the American Association of Nurserymen, is on a trip in the northwest. He passed through Chicago September 7.

ON account of the yellow fever the National Nut Growers' Association has postponed its second annual convention, scheduled for Dallas, October 25 to 27. A new date will be announced later. The president is G. M. Bacon, DeWitt, Ga., the secretary J. F. Wilson, Poulam, Ga.

A. WILLIS, Ottawa, Kan., is delegated to represent the American Association of Nurserymen at the American Pomological Society's biennial meeting at Kansas City September 19 to 21. W. C. Barry is down to respond to the mayor's address of welcome and C. L. Watrous has a place on the program. Many other nurserymen will attend.

C. A. McNABB, secretary of the Oklahoma territorial board of agriculture, is taking especial interest in the enforcement of the law passed by the last legislature for inspection of nursery stock and the licensing of outside nurserymen. All outside firms are required to submit certificates from the state inspectors in their own states, made out on forms furnished by the Oklahoma board, and giving statistics from which an idea of the firm's reliability is supposed to be gained.

WESTERN CLASSIFICATION.

E. Albertson, president of the American Association of Nurserymen, who is winding up some of his work as chairman of the transportation committee, has been notified of a number of concessions by the Western Classification Committee. The principal changes are as follows:

Sawdust rates will henceforth apply on waste excelsior. Mr. Albertson has one instance where this change makes a difference of $69 a car to the consignee and makes the traffic possible. The former car minimum of 20,000 pounds is succeeded by the following schedule: For cars thirty-six feet six inches or less, 16,000 pounds; for cars thirty-six to forty-five feet, 20,000 pounds; for cars forty-five feet six inches and up, 24,000 pounds.

Peach pits take fourth class on less than car lots; minimum car of 24,000 pounds remains unchanged. It had been hoped to get this reduced. Mr. Albertson has record of sixty car-load lots which were moved last season.

APPLES IN INDIANA.

The writer conducts a seed store in northern Indiana and as business has been rather quiet through the summer months, he has been arranging for a fall delivery of nursery stock. We find orchards throughout the county so much neglected that the fruit is of little consequence. It would be hard to find a wagon-load of one good variety, to say nothing of a car-load. So of course there is no market for such apples as are produced. We therefore believe that we will do the community and ourselves a much greater service by urging the planting of orchards of 100 or more trees of one good commercial variety and giving them proper care, and then when they come into bearing the orchardist will not be dependent on local markets. What varieties would you recommend for northern Indiana? Any information bearing on this subject will be thankfully received.

F. A. F.

Nobody plants a commercial apple orchard in northern Indiana without including Ben Davis; if it is a big orchard it is part Ben Davis; if a small orchard, Ben Davis and nothing else. Northern Indiana and southern Michigan are Greening and Baldwin territories, but I presume this inquiry is from too far south to make the recommendation of the Greening advisable. Jonathan is a fine variety; if it does well in your neighborhood there is nothing which will command a surer market. At Vincennes, in the southern part of the state I saw some fine crops of Jonathan a few days ago, also good crops of Grimes' Golden, which root-rots with us at Bridgeport. Winesap and Stark are also varieties which are to be recommended.

E. ALBERTSON.

OLD-FASHIONED GARDEN.

Please state the best way to proceed to have a satisfactory bed next season of campanula, foxglove and sweet william, when to prepare bed, when to plant and to secure blooming plants for next season, in Maryland.

J. B. B.

To secure strong blooming plants of foxgloves, sweet williams and campanulas (we presume you refer to C. media, better known as Canterbury bell) seed should be sown not later than June 1, in a frame. Cover the seeds lightly, ventilate moderately only and keep sashes well shaded until the seedlings appear. Do not allow them to become dry at any time. Gradually inure to sunlight and remove the sashes. Choose a moist, showery day to transfer them to nursery rows. Allow the foxgloves and campanulas a foot apart in the rows. Half that distance will suffice for the sweet williams. Keep the plants well cultivated and clean of weeds during the growing season.

In Massachusetts we plant out about the middle of October, in beds well manured. A month later should be sufficiently early in Maryland. In this latitude campanulas and foxgloves are of doubtful hardiness, even when covered with a thin coating of leaves, after severe weather sets in, and we find it advisable to carry a good number of frames, where we pack them over with perfectly dry leaves after the ground about them is hard frozen and place sashes on. If a bed is needed this season it would be necessary to secure plants from some nurseryman or florist, but as all these varieties are of easy culture the best results will be obtained by saving seeds in May or June next year and treating as advised. A winter coating of leaves would be advisable even in Maryland. The sweet williams flower better the second year, but foxgloves and campanulas should be raised fresh each season.

W. N. C.

GRAPES NOT SEMI-TROPICAL.

The following is a decision of the U. S. General Appraisers made public September 7:

GRAPE PLANTS.—Protest of de L. Vilamil & Co. against the assessment of duty by the collector of customs at the port of San Juan. The importers contended that small grapevine plants imported from Spain, which were classified under the provision in paragraph 252, tariff act of 1897, for "plants and vines, commonly known as nursery or greenhouse stock," should have been classified as free of duty under paragraph 560, relating to "fruit plants, tropical or semi-tropical," etc. Protest overruled.

In his decision General Appraiser Waite said:

The word "semi-tropical," as used in paragraph 560, undoubtedly has the same meaning as "subtropical," which is defined in the Century Dictionary as follows:

Of a climate or other physical character between tropical and temperate; approaching the tropical or torrid zone in temperature; noting a region on the confines of either tropic, or its plants, animals, and other natural productions; as, subtropical America; a subtropical fauna or flora.

In the opinion of the Board, paragraph 560 is intended to extend only to fruit plants which may be classed among tropical or subtropical flora, and would not extend to plants indigenous to temperate countries, imported for cultivation or propagation in tropical or subtropical regions within or under the jurisdiction of the United States.

According to the Encyclopedia Britannica and other authorities, the Vitis vinifera, or European grape, is the best-known and longest-cultivated species of the genus vitis, which is said to comprise more than 200 species of grapes. The same authority says that many species of the genus vitis are of tropical or subtropical origin, and it would seem that the native country of the European vine itself is considered to be the tropical or subtropical countries south of the Caspian. ("Vine," Encyclopedia Britannica.) However this may be, we are of opinion that the varieties of Vitis vinifera which have been cultivated for many hundreds of years in Europe, flourishing, as is well known, in such countries as Italy, France, Spain and Germany, have lost the character of tropical or subtropical plants, whatever may have been their origin. In re Henderson, G. A. 749 (T. D. 11574); T. D. 18438. It may fairly be presumed that the plants in controversy are varieties of the European grape, perhaps cultivated at or near Vigo, Spain, which has approximately the same latitude as New York. There was no evidence introduced in the case, the importers having failed to respond in any way to the Board's notice of hearing.

PACIFIC COAST.

STEILACOOM, WASH.—Fred J. Taylor has an ivy geranium of which he does not know the name, but the flower resembles Guy Lewis, which has given him a fine double sport, very pale pink, almost white, tinged with purple in the center. This in turn has sported back to a very deep pink, a fine thing. The light sport he has named Tahoma and the dark one Alki. He will work up a stock of each.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather continues warm, with an endless array of flowers. Carnations are becoming plentiful but roses continue scarce; in fact, there is no fancy stock offered of any kind. Asters still are in the lead, although they give evidences of being rather closely cut. Lilies are not so plentiful as they were and remain in good demand. Dahlias and gladioli are almost out of season. Smilax is getting firmer and longer of string and maidenhair continues plentiful.

Various Notes.

John H. Sievers & Co. report the demand for stock of their new carnation, Hannah Hobart, continues unabated.

The show of lilies in the windows of Pelicano & Co. is one of the sights of Kearney street.

Leopold & Ephraim had a good run of funeral orders during the month of August.

Frank Armanino, of Golden Gate, has finished replanting his houses. They are devoted principally to the standard varieties of roses. Three houses are kept for maidenhair and asparagus.

Chas. Beebe, of Trumbull & Beebe, states that his firm is receiving large orders for fall bulbs and that the prospect for business is good in all departments.

Culligan & Co., successors to Geo. B. Jones, are experts in the line of window decorations. Their show of fine flowers is one of the largest and best on Sutter street.

John M. Holland has returned from a trip to southern California.

Geo. Rhodes will take a three weeks' vacation, visiting Portland, Tacoma and Seattle.

The Realty Syndicate greenhouses, beyond Piedmont, are now at their best. The display of ferns, palms and stove plants cannot be excelled in this neighborhood. John Pfond has the stock in charge.

P. J. Keller has decided to build several greenhouses on his grounds on Piedmont avenue, Oakland. Mr. Keller has been out of the florists' business for several years.

Miss Solomon, associated several years ago with Miss Bates, the decorator, has moved to East Oakland and is building up quite a trade.

H. Gresens, of Alameda, has given up his interest in landscape gardening and in future will devote his entire time to his florist and plant business. G.

SEATTLE, WASH.

Building and Other Notes.

As mentioned a few weeks ago, the talk of a new firm commencing business at South Park has materialized. Three houses 20x150 are in course of construction, under the management of Robert Prentice.

Our violet grower, Frank J. Bell, is also enlarging his plant by the addition of one house, 35x150. He believes in wide houses for violets and carnations. His place is situated on the north side of Lake Washington and is rather a hard place to get at. When I came to the sign of the Eureka Gardens I could not but exclaim, "I have found it!" And, sure enough, Mr. Bell was there, perched in an apple-tree, doing some acrobatic stunts in trying to reach some fruit on the topmost branches.

Our city park superintendent, J. W. Thompson, also has the building craze, one house, 20x100, being enough for a start, he thinks.

Malmo & Co. are planning an extensive range of glass at their nursery, situated on the old Renton line, and grading is being done on the ground which the houses are to occupy.

Chas. Hofmeister, proprietor of the Lake Washington Greenhouses, is back from a visit to the Portland fair.

The dates for the mum show are November 15 to 18.

A distinguished visitor was P. O'Mara, who visited most of our leading florists. Other visitors lately have been the Judd brothers, of North Yakima, and J. Paris, of Everett. A. B.

MAKING A LAWN.

The month of September is one of the best times in the year to make a lawn. Many people have an idea that a lawn can be started in the middle of winter, or very early in spring, to advantage, but this is not so. Kentucky blue grass is used almost exclusively on this coast for lawn making, unless for a situation that is very shady or where it is to be tramped on, in which case Australian rye grass will give better results. My reason for naming this month as one of the best for planting any sort of a lawn is that blue grass or clover will germinate in four days and in three weeks it is possible to give the first weeding. In the winter, when the ground is cold, it may take as long as two months for the grass to show itself nicely and in the meanwhile the weeds will have almost choked out the good grass or clover. In the summer or early fall the grass will grow fully as fast as the weeds and, if it be kept sufficiently moist, will form a good sod before the colder weather checks its growth. If the lawn has been weeded a couple of times there need be no further worryment about the result.

The first item when planting is contemplated is to see that the ground has been well spaded. If it is sandy or poor dig in plenty of well rotted manure and after the surface has been well raked, it is ready for the seed. Kentucky blue grass, if the situation is favorable, makes the most enduring sod. Many people like a mixture of clover with it. The White Dutch variety is the best for this purpose and should be planted in the proportion of one pound to six of the other. Clover in time will tend to choke out the blue grass, especially if the situation be at all shady, but of itself will make a very good sod in a short time.

When the seed is sown it is a good idea to cover the ground very lightly with straw, as this saves considerable watering, and watering with us in the summer and fall is often the most expensive part of gardening. However, it is necessary to keep the surface of the ground constantly moist until the grass comes up evenly. In about three weeks, at this season, it will be ready for the first weeding, after which if any spots appear bare a handful of seed may be sprinkled on them.

With Australian rye grass it is equally as important to properly water, although when the grass has grown for several months it will get along with considerably less attention. It roots very deeply, will grow in almost any location and, making such a dense mat, it chokes out all foreign weeds in a short time. It will stand considerable abuse from tramping without dying out and if cut sufficiently often makes a very fair sward. If allowed to go too long without trimming it is very difficult to cut, and then makes a very poor showing for several weeks. It will stand for several months with hardly any moisture and in this regard is quite the reverse from blue grass. The principal trouble with the latter is to get it to survive the first winter, for it is easily killed by too much water or shade, but if once well established it makes an ideal lawn and lasts for years if noxious weeds are kept from getting a foothold. It needs trim-

ASTER BEETLE.

I enclose some bugs picked from my aster plants. Please tell me how to destroy them. J. W. V.

The aster beetle is a very troublesome pest at times, and from the fact that it attacks the open flowers it is not easy to destroy without injury to the blooms. James Semple, an extensive grower of these flowers, recommends the use of a mixture of benzine and water, one gill of benzine to one pint of water, the mixture to be passed along beneath the plants, when the fumes of the benzine cause the insects to fall into the pan containing the liquid. He also states that this operation should be performed two or three times a day during the eight or nine days' period that the beetles usually put in an appearance. W. H. T.

SWEET PLANT AND PALMS.

What is the true name of the specimen known as the sweet plant? How do you propagate it? What will kill the white worms at the roots of my palms and ferns? J. W. V.

The common names of plants are frequently a source of confusion, and this designation, sweet plant, was a new one to the writer, but after having received a specimen the mystery was found to be solvable. The plant in question is really a club moss, Selaginella Kraussiana, and an old inhabitant of the greenhouse. This plant may readily be propagated by cuttings, the latter being formed of growths about two inches long, and several of such cuttings being potted together in a 2-inch or 3-inch pot in sandy soil, kept shaded and moist. They will soon become established.

Try watering the palms with lime water about once a week in order to discourage the worms, or hot water at a temperature of not more than 130 degrees may prove satisfactory. W. H. TAPLIN.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

One does not always care to tell the same story, but sometimes necessity compels us to. September has not brought much improvement in business and stock is in abundance. Asters are fine but the specials supply the demand; grades below that are lost.

Club Meeting.

President Langhans called the Florists' Club to order September 5 with a very fair representation of members present. An interesting talk on summer flowers was given by John Zimmerman, which he illustrated with a large variety of cut blooms from the institution at Dixmont. Mr. Wolf, of Emsworth, also showed plants of fancy-leaved caladium and Nægelia Geroltiana, which were admired by all.

The president called on those who had been to Washington to report what they had seen and heard at the convention. Bedding plants and bedding generally was discussed at some length and many comparisons drawn between this city and those visited, none of which were disparaging to this city. All spoke highly of the departments which came under Mr. Brown, where they found many good things well done. Special mention was made of the kind treatment they received at the hands of the Washington and Baltimore florists, and on motion the secretary was instructed to write the thanks of the club for the attention shown our members.

During the evening many members present were at a loss to understand why John Zimmerman seemed so interested in mentioning the ladies, and bring them into every discussion, but before the meeting adjourned he admitted that he had found the best little Scotch girl in the world and that they had made the trip to the convention their bridal tour. Congratulations were then in order.

Various Notes.

Visitors of the week were J. A. Peterson, Cincinnati; Martin Reukauf, of Philadelphia; W. A. Herbert, Wellsville, O.; E. M. Hall, Fairmont, W. Va., with his bride passing through the city and stopped off to hear the Damrosch orchestra and to see his friends.

W. J. Smith, better known as Jarve, is receiving congratulations. It is the first and a boy.

Gustav Ludwig has been confined to his home with hay fever. Hoo-Hoo.

SMITH'S Chrysanthemum Manual sent by the REVIEW on receipt of 25c.

ABUNDANCE The Phenomenal Yields

A carnation that stands alone for blooming, as a glance at the above photo will show. No other sort can compare with it. Blooming profusely from fall until thrown out in summer. Color, pure white, a good size, well built flower of the shape of Scott. Stems in fall 14 to 16 inches, stretching to 2, 2 1/2 and 3 feet in winter and spring, very stiff without being rigid. Is a fine keeper and shipper, flowers sent to Cuba last year kept in perfect condition a week after arrival. Plant has the slim, wiry growth of McGowan in fall but loses this character as winter and spring advance, as it makes a rapid, strong and vigorous growth. It makes a large bunch of fibrous roots, which accounts for its wonderful recuperative power, and makes it extremely easy to handle; it can be transplanted with perfect safety, plants standing up like soldiers in a couple of days after planting. It makes absolutely no grass at base of plants for every shoot runs quickly up to flower. A thoroughly business Carnation. Is a profuse propagator and a sure and easy rooter. Has never been subject to any disease. There is nothing in the way of a Carnation easier to grow, but beware of overfeeding, as it won't stand it; flowers will burst if fed highly; 3 parts of well-rotted sod or rich loam, with 1 part well-rotted manure is all it requires, no other dressing. This is a Carnation that returns dollars for cents to the grower, for while he grows Abundance he will always get an abundance.

Orders taken now for cuttings, so send in your order early as they are filled in strict rotation.

Price for well-rooted Cuttings, $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000; 500 at 1000 rate. To those wishing unrooted cuttings will be given 25 extra with each 100. Rooted cuttings as soon as possible; unrooted cuttings after Nov. 1. Cash before delivery

GODFREY ASCHMANN

OF AMERICA

Order now while the weather permits shipping. Notice—When you undertake anything, do it well or not at all. This is our motto adopted 10 years ago when we imported the first lot of this well known pot plant, the ARAUCARIA EXCELSA from Belgium. These everlasting green foliaged pot plants are growing more in favor by the tasteful plant buyers of this land from year to year. Please watch the growth of our importation during the last 10 years: first year 100, second 250, third 500, fourth 1000, fifth 2,000. This year (1905) which is the 10th anniversary of our first importation, our spring importation amounted to 5,000. All these are grown for us under contract by an Araucaria specialist in Belgium. I must say for the benefit of my customers that they were never before so nice and large for the money as this year. I herewith quote you special prices on these, in or out of:

5 1/4-in. pots, 10 to 12 in. high, 2 yrs. old, 3 tiers.....	$0.50
5 1/4-in. pots, 13 to 15 in. high, 3 to 4 tiers.....	.60
6-in. pots, 16 to 18 in. high, 3 to 4 tiers.....	.75

DENVER.

The Market.

Not a large business is expected at this season of the year, but the demand for cut flowers last week was very good and larger than anticipated, one large funeral out of town helping out to a large extent. Nearly every retailer makes the statement that business in August was from ten to twenty per cent better than August of last year, and September has started very well. A large crowd of G. A. R. people, as well as tourists accompanying them, filled the city to its fullest the first week of the month but they did not buy many flowers. However, their money will get into circulation shortly and we will all get a shot at it.

The supply of American Beauties is increasing and a good demand prevails. Some extra fine flowers are seen at some of the large stores, prices for the best grades being $5 and $6 per dozen, retail; others down to $3, according to quality. Brides and Bridesmaids are now plentiful and are in very good shape. Other varieties of roses are also increasing in number, Liberty being very nice and selling well.

Carnations are not arriving in any large number, and are still short of stem and are small flowers. Asters are in great quantity. Really good whites sell well. There are not so many purple ones on the market as in former years. There are large quantities of inferior asters which have the effect of keeping down the price of good ones. Lilies are quite plentiful and the flowers are very good; they retail at 25 cents per bloom. Sweet peas are nearly over, being short of stem and small flowers; they are being retailed by some of the stores for 5 cents per bunch of twenty-five. Dahlias are in season.

Various Notes.

The Scott Floral Co. has a very attractive window of Twentieth Century dahlias.

All the stores had windows especially decorated in honor of the G. A. R.

J. A. Valentine and B. E. Gillis, of the Park Floral Co., were well pleased with their trip east. Mr. Valentine left almost immediately for California to join Mrs. Valentine on a trip to Portland and Seattle.

The bowling season has opened and the Florists' League has called a meeting to reorganize, on Monday, September 18.

Field-Grown Asparagus Sprengeri

Those who have purchased our field-grown plants in the past are convinced that they are much superior to pot-grown, both for pots and bench culture.

When housed they immediately start into active growth, throwing up numerous growths, which come to perfection much earlier than those from pots. Field culture adds to the vigor of the plants and an enormous crop of green is the result.

DELPHINIUMS.

Delphiniums are among the most showy of our tall-growing, hardy herbaceous perennials, and they are admirably adapted for massing in large borders and beds, and for grouping in shrubberies. They like a deep, rich, porous well-drained loam to grow in, and will give a good return for any assistance rendered in the way of stimulants by the production of finer spikes and blooms.

In order to secure the best results with delphiniums, the sites for groups should be cultivated two feet deep, or as near this depth as the soil will admit, and be heavily enriched with well-decomposed stable manure and bone meal some time before the plants are put in. The best time to plant is early autumn, and the best plants to employ are small ones.

PLEASE MENTION THE REVIEW WHEN WRITING ANY OF THESE ADVERTISERS.

Large plants somehow can never be induced, after being transplanted, to produce the handsome spikes they may have done previously.

Blue is the predominating color among delphiniums, but there are numerous shades; though many of the varieties are so nearly alike that, for general purposes, a selection of about half-a-dozen of the best will be ample. Of course, anyone making a specialty of delphiniums can find plenty to select from, but for grouping and producing effect the following varieties will meet all that is necessary in this respect, viz.: King of Delphiniums, dark blue and plum, with white eye, very large; Sir John Forrest, rich violet and purple, with large white eye; Mrs. Chamberlain, rich blue and plum, with brown eye; Persimmon, light blue, cylindrical form; Lord Kitchener, lavender, blue and white center; and Primrose, white, with yellow eye.—Gardeners' Magazine.

SCABIOSA CAUCASICA.

This very pretty blue mauve flower has been plentiful in the market this season. It comes in rather late in the season, but now that this shade of color is so much appreciated, it should be worth the attention of those who grow for provincial trade. It comes freely from seed, and will succeed in almost any soil. The color may vary a little, yet with carefully selecting a few of the most decided for seed purposes, it may be improved rather than otherwise. Where the flowers are cut as they open, the same plants will continue in flower for a long time. Although it may be grown anywhere, good ground will give best results. It seems to do best in light loam.

There is another plant, Catananche cerulea, which is a hardy perennial, and has flowers of a similar shape and color. I find this, though not seen in Covent Garden, is grown in the south, and is much appreciated. I think it is quite safe to recommend this to all who grow hardy flowers for cutting. There is, I believe, a little variation in the color of this, as in most things which are raised from seeds. Though a perennial it comes freely from seeds, which should be sown early in the year, under glass, for flowering the same year.—Horticultural Advertiser.

WARREN, O.—Adgate & Son have completed a new house, 24x100, for carnations. They are now cutting good stock and report trade opening well, after a very good summer.

LONGMONT, COLO.—Charles W. Collins died September 6. He was 46 years of age and leaves a wife and two children. He was a deaf mute but had a nice business. He was building three new greenhouses at the time of his death.

CALLA, O.—Jacob Bassinger and others have organized a new company and built a fine range of greenhouses for cut flowers. The business is entirely independent from the well-known Templin Co., in which Mr. Bassinger and other stockholders are interested.

CINCINNATI

The Market.

Business continues fair only. A good many of our flower buyers are now beginning to arrive home from the summer resorts and that will help matters greatly. A little funeral work helps, but there is still a surplus in most lines.

Roses are coming in larger quantities and every day sees them improving. Carnations are also improving rapidly. Some very fine asters are to be had but move slowly. The poorer grades are hard to move at any price. There are many tuberoses on the market and they move very slowly.

"Green goods" are in good supply, with the exception of smilax, which is very scarce.

Various Notes.

E. G. Gillett has just returned from a trip among the growers of Indiana and Ohio.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Society was held September 9, but few of the members were present. Wm. Murphy, who is still up north, not being present, Ben George was in the chair. It was decided to have a general discussion at our next meeting of the best methods to use in conducting our regular flower shows. A large meeting is expected and all members are requested to come prepared to give their ideas on this subject.

THE GLASS MARKET.

Stocks of window glass are becoming scarcer every day, and as few of the largest manufacturers have yet succeeded in coming to an agreement with their workmen for the ensuing season it appears likely that supplies will soon be exhausted. As the demand is increasing greatly it is expected that prices will soon be advanced again, although they were only recently raised ten to fifteen per cent. Sizes 24, 26 and 28-inch are especially scarce, and there are almost no available stocks of the 24-inch size. Premiums are still being paid for the most desirable sizes. The discounts off the October, 1903, list are ninety and ninety and ten per cent on the first two brackets of single and double B. All other sizes of B take a discount of eighty-nine per cent, while all sizes of A are entitled to a discount of eighty-eight per cent.

ANTIRRHINUM QUEEN OF NORTH

I was interested in the note in the REVIEW of August 31 in which W. G. Thomas recommends antirrhinum as a cut flower crop and Queen of the North as the best variety to grow. SOIL FOR ASTERS.

Will you kindly inform me the kind of soil most suitable for the growing of asters? Does the aster require heavy fertilized land and if so what fertilizer would you advise to obtain the best results? Is nitrate of soda beneficial? If so, when should it be applied?

D. R.

We have seen asters grown finely in very different textures of soil, providing it was dug or ploughed deeply and in the best mechanical condition. We have in mind a fine lot of asters in a heavy clay, but the man dug deep, worked in a lot of farmyard manure and watered them continually. We have seen equally as good on a dark, friable, rather gravelly loam, so we believe quality of soil is not of much consequence, but cultivation is. The soil should be dug or ploughed deeply and fertilized with farmyard manure.

We have never tried nitrate of soda on asters. Our experience with this manure, dry, on carnation beds, makes us cautious. As a liquid one pound in fifty gallons of water would add size and color to the flowers, but it should not be necessary. Deep soil for the roots, plenty of barnyard manure and copious waterings during dry spells is all that is needed to produce good asters.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS.

R. G. Dun & Co., the great commercial agents, say of general business conditions, which have an important bearing on our trade:

"Commercial news continues most satisfactory, improvement being reported in almost every case, except the further decline in prices of securities. Crops are being harvested under most favorable conditions. Industrial progress is accelerated by the broadening demand for iron and steel products. Textile mills and shoe factories are well occupied, while the demand for material testifies to the extension of building operations. Considering the prosperous conditions labor struggles are exceptionally few. Retailers report a wholesome distribution of staple merchandise, and there are comparatively few complaints regarding collections.

SCORES OF FLORISTS USE

Hammond's Grape Dust

CHRYSANTHEMUMS AND CARNATIONS

This comes from WALLACE GOMERSALL, superintendent of the famous "Wodenethe," owned and finely maintained by Winthrop Sargent, Esq., Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y.

"For chrysanthemums we use GRAPE DUST with the best results by freely dusting with it until the delicate blooms come, then we are a bit shy of it, to prevent any staining of the petals, but during the green state even in bad weather, there is no trace of fungus, and we keep free of the spot. I have recommended it to many gardeners, and so far my acquaintances have found it very valuable. In common with many gardeners and florists, I have found it of great value in checking the rust on carnations. It is not expensive to use, for by using in air bellows it diffuses itself everywhere, and is in my judgment, a valuable every day article. For roses it is of exceptional benefit against mildew."

How to Use Grape Dust for Violets, etc., in the Greenhouse.

Fill the house with dust as soon as the plants are set, and let it settle over the plants, or put one pound to a pail of water and spray it finely over everything, plants ground, benches, etc. Spores are likely to settle anywhere about and prevention is the best remedy. Its fineness, its reliability and its great diffusiveness combine to make GRAPE DUST take the highest rank as a popular and economical fungicide.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

A continuation of cool weather, with light showers, has caused a brisk demand for flowers and prices have an upward tendency. Quite a number of large funerals, and some wedding orders, have kept things cleared up. Roses are of better quality, although prices have not changed materially. Some very good Brides, Maids and Gates are on the market, but as yet Beauties are scarce and what few come in are of poor quality. Carnations are to be seen and, for so early in the season, are good. Prices are a shade better than formerly.

There are some very fine asters on the market and they are bringing good prices. Tuberoses and other outdoor blooms come in handy these days for work and are being used considerably.

Various Notes.

The Bowling Club met in regular session last Tuesday. There was a good attendance, notwithstanding the night was wet, and some good records were made.

R. S. Brown, we regret to say, is still suffering with varicose veins and is unable to get around without the aid of crutches. The boys are hoping that it will not be long before he will be with us again.

W. H. Culp Co., of Wichita, Kan., reports business as increasing very satisfactorily, necessitating an increase in their working force.

C. A. Doty, 1125 Main street, has rented his flower space to Mr. Ebberfield, of the Alpha Floral Co., and a party from Omaha, who will open for business about September 14. The business will be conducted under Mr. Doty's name.

Geo. Kessler, landscape architect for the Park Board, has completed his scheme of the floor of Convention hall as it will appear when the different flower show exhibits are placed. Wyatt Robinson, decorator for the Priests of Pallas, will do the work. The idea is unique, as every exhibit can be seen from the main entrance, doing away with the necessity of going to the roof garden to see what is on the floor.

Mr. Harnden, of the Harnden Seed Co., is completing arrangements for his cut flower department, which he will run in connection with his seed business.

during the last month, with a large number of florists who next spring want additional houses. It seems the delay that is bound to come when ordering is put off, until everyone else wants, cost these men a good bit last year.

With our three plants running at full tilt, trying to make up a lot of stock sizes for the "put off" kind, we cannot seem to get much ahead of actual orders. The fact is every line of business, this year, promises to be way beyond anything yet. The same with the florists — all talking "more glass; more glass." Have your talk with us NOW! During the winter the whole thing will be taken care of, ready for immediate erecting any time after December 1.

Perhaps you have not given it a thought, but we are the largest greenhouse manufacturers and equippers in the world. Fifty years at it.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

Beware Early Frost.

Not so many days ago a chill went over the country, at least over the eastern states, cool enough to remind us what we must soon expect. In this particular locality we have seldom seen the most tender plants hurt by frost during September, yet twenty-five miles east and away from the influence of Lake Erie we have seen dahlias, gladioli, asters and all garden flowers cut down on September 19. I only quote this that you can depend on no date for our first killing frost. It may hang off until early November or swoop down with a withering blast the first of October.

To be reminiscent a moment, some twenty years ago the weather up to October 9 had been so warm and balmy every one around here was off his guard. It had not been below 50 degrees, night or day, since the previous May. On that fatal day down came a cutting black frost of 6 degrees—and what havoc there was! Far better had we gone by dates and been properly prepared.

Fire Heat.

This is a time of the year when there is plenty of scope for the exercise of judgment in forcing. Rose growers have, of course, had steam on for weeks, to dispel the dampness and chill that we get toward daylight, and a little heat in the pipes would be of great benefit to many of our choicest plants. Poinsettias and begonias will soon show the effects of several chilly, damp nights. A little air and a little heat are the ideal conditions that suit most of our tender soft wooded plants.

Shading.

Another reminder is to get the permanent shading off your houses. Very few plants need any more shading and the few that do can be shaded for a few hours if necessary. Plants do not burn or suffer by the direct sun in the fall as they do after months of dark winter. Get your glass clean, for you will soon need all the light you can get.

Lift the Stock Plants.

There should be no delay in lifting and potting any plants you need for stock or flowering, such as a few aca-lypha, Salvia splendens, stevia, etc. It is all very well to think you can run with a spade and do all this when you feel Jack Frost approaching. There is too much to do that afternoon. Get them potted and standing outdoors and you can hustle a lot of potted stuff under shelter in a hurry.

Early Harrisii.

Lilium Harrisii that were potted in July and have been in a cold frame since are mostly well rooted and can be put into a warm, light house and you should have the earliest in flower in November. These lily bulbs by no means all start together and the average florist does not want them all to flower together, so select the strongest and most forward weekly. Their time of flowering will extend over two months, but they will all get there in time.

Once more let me remind you not to neglect to thoroughly water your flats of Romans, Paper Whites and other French bulbs. This is often a dry month and it takes a heavy rain to penetrate the covering of the flats and down to the roots.

Poinsettias.

Let me remind you that this month is late enough to make up your pans of poinsettias or shift any plants that you intend to grow singly. When growing, with large green foliage, the poinsettia is very impatient of its roots being disturbed, so plants in 4-inch pots should go into the flowering pot, a 6-inch, and little plants in 2½-inch or 3-inch should be selected for pans of various sizes.

Lorraine Begonias.

Gloire de Lorraine begonias are now making a wonderful growth. They will naturally take plenty of water when growing so vigorously but should always be watered with care. Take the watering pot and look at each plant. There are very few experts with the hose and this plant wants no water on the foliage.

Occasionally plants of this gem will make shoots of extra strength, a little out of proportion to the plant. The two or three top joints of these strong shoots can be taken off and root readily in flats or pans of sand and will make very fine plants for next year, fully as good as the best leaf cuttings.

Hydrangeas.

Those who have suitable soil plant out their hydrangeas. Fine plants can be produced this way, but not as surely as by growing them in pots. Do not delay in lifting and potting them at once. They will be all the better for being established in the pots. Do not let them suffer for want of water when first lifted. You can ripen their wood and buds later, when you bring them in the houses. Expert growers of hydrangeas do not want any frost on their buds. One degree of frost may do no harm, but two or three will. Let the ripening be done by gradually withholding water and not by frost.

Gypsophila.

Every florist of artistic taste should grow Gypsophila paniculata and plenty of it. It is true it will grow in any garden, but we do not see enough of it. Here is the difference. In a hotel lately the dinner tables were decorated with poor, liver-colored asters, which would produce the blues if you did not already possess them; stiff, formal, hideous, and you turned to the faces of the old maids who waited table for relief. In Washington, during the convention, we noticed in some restaurants vases of golden rod very loosely arranged, but scattered through them and above them this beautiful gypsophila, Baby's Breath. It may have been very inexpensive but an object of art and beauty. You can buy and plant it now, or wait until spring and buy a packet of seed now and winter the plants in a cold frame. It is the same refined taste that would admire and want gypsophila that demands our sweet stevia at Christmas.

WILLIAM SCOTT.

EARLY VARIETIES.

The first mums of the season are beginning to be heard from. I saw last week a fine flower of Elsie Fulton, and Monrovia and other kinds are nearly ready. Almost before we know it we shall be once more in the old-time rush.

It cannot be said that there is much money in the extra early flowers. In September the market has not yet begun to move to any great extent and, in addition to this, asters and dahlias are fine and come into direct competition with the chrysanthemum, so that while an odd dozen flowers are all right as a novelty, there is no real market for them at this early date.

For the past two years a sharp frost has occurred around October 1 with us and this, by killing everything outside, has created a fine market for early flowering varieties. With an open fall these favorable conditions do not occur and I recall that some four or five years ago the price of early flowers was so absurdly low, owing to the fact that the market was filled with dahlias, cosmos and other flowers, that many growers temporarily abandoned the growing of early varieties. Last year on October 1 Monrovia was selling for $5 a dozen in New York and the same grade of flowers a few days later was not worth half that sum.

Ventilation.

We can only hope for a killing frost again this year. Already the thermometer has registered 36 degrees with us and this is a strong reminder that from now on we must pay attention to the ventilation. The days are still warm but when the night temperature gets near the freezing point the ventilation must be reduced and the houses run at from 45 to 50 degrees. Never close the ventilators tight in houses where the buds are showing color. Leave on an inch or so of air to prevent the condensation of moisture on the petals or much damping of the flowers will result. It is far better to leave on a little air and run enough heat through the pipes to maintain the temperature at the proper point.

Spraying and Feeding.

Spraying should be discontinued as soon as the buds crack their husky covering or the water will lodge in the crevices and many buds will be spoiled. This is particularly true of kinds like the Eatons, which form a hollow depression in the center of the bud, affording an excellent chance for water to lie there. A much drier atmosphere should be maintained from now on and the paths of the house and the foliage should be dry by night. As the crop finishes very much less water is needed than when the plants were growing rapidly.

Feeding, too, must be stopped as the buds show color or the petals will damp, an excess of nitrogenous manure making the petals so soft that they literally melt away when the night moisture strikes them. This applies, of course, to the early flowers. Later varieties where the buds are still small are just now in the best possible shape for feeding, though the dose should never be very strong.

foliage. Mme. Marie Masse, of which we now have so many shades of color, makes the best dwarf plants for early work. Horace Martin is still the most useful early yellow.

Both in cut bloom and plants, a good deal of very rough material comes into the market. The plants which are taken up from the ground while in bud find some demand for planting out in beds, yet they have to go out at very low prices, there being too many of these on the market. I may again revert to the fact that in putting chrysanthemums on the market, much depends upon the packing. Last season we had some excellent examples of bunching and also packing specimen blooms at the market growers' show. One most important item I have noted is that blooms of various sizes should not be mixed together. It is not only that their proper value can be better estimated, but in all florist's work, it is much handier to have them of equal size, and in some cases it is quite necessary. The extra large specimen blooms cut with long stems should be packed without bunching, the medium size made up in bunches of six blooms, and the smaller twelve blooms in a bunch. Those not disbudded have to be made up in bunches of equal size without regard to the number of blooms, but it is best to have about an equal number of stems in each bunch. It is perhaps unnecessary to give any instructions to the majority of growers, yet I am often shown examples of bad packing in the market, and this has suggested the above remarks.

THE BOSTON EXHIBITION.

The Massachusetts Horticultural Society's annual exhibition of plants, flowers, fruits and vegetables, which was held at Horticultural hall, Boston, from September 14 to 17, was a most successful one, there being good displays in all departments. The most noticeable falling off was in crotons, caladiums and other colored-leaved plants. These are less popular here than a few years ago. Stove plants generally are also less grown on private estates, the owners preferring to have plants grown requiring temperatures which will permit of their being inspected with a greater degree of comfort. This is a regrettable fact.

The main exhibition hall was entirely filled with groups and specimen plants, and presented a very attractive appearance. For the best finished group covering 200 square feet of space Mrs. John L. Gardner, Wm. Thatcher, gardener, won with a splendid group, finely arranged, Edward McMulkin being second. For pair of specimen palms Mrs. Gardner, A. F. Estabrook, George Barker, gardener, and E. McMulkin won in order named. Mrs. Gardner had the best specimen greenhouse plant, showing the glory pea of Australia, Gloriosa superba. The same exhibit took first and second for six stove and greenhouse plants, first for six caladiums, specimen fern, six dracaenas, ten Begonia Rex and tub of Ouvirandra fenestralis.

A. F. Estabrook had the best five specimen ferns and five adiantums and was second for specimen fern and cycas. D. F. Roy, from the C. C. Converse es-

MUMS AT LONDON.

We had chrysanthemums in the London market earlier than usual this season, says a writer in the Horticultural Trade Journal. The first good blooms came in about July 18; these were Madame Desgranges, and might be called specimen blooms. Both the white and the yellow varieties were equally good. Here is an instance of what may be done by careful selection; for though still going under the old name they were clearly a much improved form. When referring to these in a chat with another grower who does pot chrysanthemums remarkably well, he remarked that he had quite given up Desgranges as useless; depending upon Lady Fitzwygram for his first crop, but this comes in a little later. There is clearly an advantage in being first, for those referred to above sold readily at 75 cents a dozen blooms, and I found the other morning that since other growers have followed, good blooms are down to 50 cents a dozen.

Lady Fitzwygram is undoubtedly the finest white variety as a pot plant for early work. This has been making from $5 to $7.50 per dozen, the plants being remarkably well finished and with good tate, won on pair of lycopodiums, was second for ouvirandra and third for specimen fern. Rather singularly the $50 offered in two croton classes did not draw a single entry, the first time such a thing has happened in Boston. For best collection of hardy coniferous trees in tubs or pots Blue Hill Nurseries took first and second, showing some sixty-five varieties. Edward McMulkin also showed a fine group of these.

Miscellaneous groups not for competition were unusually numerous and attractive. Edward McMulkin, in addition to his prize group, showed a large assortment of palms, ferns and other foliage plants. Harvard Botanic Gardens contributed a very extensive and superbly grown collection of fine foliage plants, such as marantas, phyllotaniums, heliconias, dracenas, crotons, etc. These were finely arranged, a silver medal for superior arrangement being accorded. There were many fine specimens in Mr. Cameron's group, which was a veritable monument of painstaking cultural skill. In addition Mr. Cameron showed a collection of well pitched nepenthes, a table of Nerine Fothergilli major dotted among economic plants, a splendid Ouirandra fenestralis, a big collection of hardy perennials in over 100 varieties and a large table of tuberous begonias, his contributions being a whole show in themselves.

Julius Roehrs Co. had a group of ornamental foliated plants, including Ficus pandurata, Heliconia Edwardus rex, Alpinia Sandera, awarded honorable mention; new crotons, etc. W. W. Rawson had a fine table of Impatiens Holstei over a groundwork of ferns. Lager & Hurrell had a group of seasonable orchids. H. A. Dreer Co. contributed a tank of aquatics. The new nymphæa, Bissetti, received honorable mention and Victoria Trickeri a certificate of merit. R. & J. Farquhar & Co. showed a number of their new Christmas lily, L. Philippenense, in a group of palms and other foliage plants. The liliiums flowering were from extremely small bulbs. The strong gardenia-like odor was very noticeable in the hall. H. H. Barrows had a group of Nephrolepis Barrowsii, also the newer, more compact and very much improved N. Whitmanii. The latter received a first-class certificate and was much admired. It will be offered to the trade in the spring of 1906.

The lecture hall was filled with dahlias and other seasonable flowers. Dahlias made a big show, competition being close in all the classes. Some of the leading exhibitors and prize-winners were H. F. Burt, J. K. Alexander, W. G. Winsor, E. W. Ela, A. E. Johnson, J. D. Cooke, R. P. Struthers, G. H. Walker and Mrs. L. M. Towle. A. E. Johnson showed a table of very fine and distinct seedlings, several receiving honorable mention. Blue Hill Nurseries took first and second for thirty varieties herbaceous plants, Mrs. E. M. Gill being second. J. K. Alexander and others showed gladioli. From the Boston park department came an extensive and very interesting collection of berried shrubs. Jackson Dawson, from the Arnold Arboretum, had what was probably the most complete collection of ornamental fruited crab-apples ever staged, over sixty varieties being shown, also numerous pyrus, Vitis vinifera and several American varieties of grapes, the whole making a unique exhibit. It was awarded a silver medal.

In the numerous fruit classes there was keen competition for pears, apples, peaches and hardy grapes. Indoor apples made a much smaller showing than usual, M. F. Plant, T. W. Head, gardener, being the only exhibitor. There was a splendid display of vegetables, one of the best ever seen in Boston.

The attendance was unusually good for a September exhibition.

GLOXINIAS.

The following note on gloxinias is from John T. Allen, gardener to John R. Drexel, Newport, R. I.:

My phenomenal success with gloxinias this year has induced me to give my experience and suggestions to those interested in the growing of one of our most beautiful flowering bulbs. Having tried many different ways in the past twelve years, and noting carefully the results each year, I am convinced that I have reached the climax of my experiments.

I make a compost of well-rotted sod and leaf-mold, about half and half, fill the pots and place the bulbs in loosely. Water very sparingly until well rooted and be very careful to have the water at the same temperature as the house, as gloxinias are very susceptible to changes of temperature. Never use a syringe or allow the foliage to get wet and you will not be troubled with rust.

In the past years I have been in the habit of feeding with a variety of high grade fertilizers, but this year I have only fed with Bonora once a week, using no other food. It is easily applied and clean and has given me better results than any previous year. Feed only after the bulbs are well rooted and until the buds commence to show color. After flowering dry them off gradually until the bulbs get thoroughly ripe; then remove them from the soil and remove all fibrous roots. Place in flats of dry sand and keep in a place where the temperature never goes below 45 degrees and not above 65 degrees.

This year I have averaged from fifty to seventy-five blooms in 8-inch pots and have had the finest foliage, free from rust, of any previous year.

I have grown one house of gardenias. One-half I fed in my usual manner and one-half with Bonora. The Bonora far surpasses anything I have previously used.

Taxes on Greenhouse Stock.

In answer to "W. B.," page 930 of a recent issue of the REVIEW, I would state that years ago the tax assessor taxed my growing crop as an additional value of real estate. I objected and went before the county commissioners. The judge of probate took the same view I did, that all plants, shrubs and trees belong to my growing crop, the same as corn and cotton of a farmer. It does not make any difference if the crop will mature in five months or five years; the principle is the same. I did not have an attorney; I simply represented myself. The result was that my growing crop was not taxed. The state law does not permit this.

this releases more ammonia than the rose has use for and is apt to make the plants drop their leaves.

Wood ashes, being a very concentrated form of food, require to be used with great caution and unless satisfactory evidence that such food is necessary is apparent, it is safe to do without it, as it is safe only in the hands of an expert.

Clay's fertilizer, nitrate of soda and many other chemical preparations, though they all possess their merits, belong to the same category and should only be used when absolutely needed, and it requires an expert to find this out, and the proper stage at which to apply them. In the hands of the less experienced they are a source of danger.

Liquid feeding for young stock can be made from fresh cow manure put into a tank with sufficient water to start fermentation; then drained off and reduced with water until it looks like beer in color. One application per week during bright weather, while the crops are forming, will be sufficient. An addition of one gallon of ammonia to each sixty gallons of water will benefit the roses and foliage, but for a first application, if the plants are not very strong, a less quantity would suffice.

It is always safe to be conservative in applying liquid food during the short days, when root action is slow, and safer still to depend more on the natural product from the barn than to resort to concentrated forms of food. When these are used it pays to use them in small quantities first and note the effect. If the results are satisfactory the strength can be increased as the plants get stronger and the days get longer.

RIBES.

FEEDING ROSES.

This is my second year with roses and I have a small house half filled with young plants and half with carried-over ones, both of which are in good condition. What I want to know is as to the feeding of them for the entire season, considering them always to be in a normal condition. When shall I mulch, give bone, wood ashes, liquid manure, Clay's fertilizer, nitrate of soda, and how much per hundred square feet of bench? I am thinking more of the best results than of any necessary trouble or expense.

F. D. B.

In regard to feeding of roses, this is a matter which is very much abused and there is far more harm done by overfeeding than by no feeding at all.

Young rose stock, if the soil were in any way suitable and composted in the manner so frequently advocated in these columns, should require no feeding for some time to come. Carried-over stock can be given a light feeding when the young flower stems are from four to eight inches in length, but this should be discontinued before the crop is ready to cut and repeated when the next crop is in the same stage. Feeding during dark weather is not advisable.

Referring to the quality of food, this much depends on the relative quality of the soil used. Heavy clay soils require quite different feeding matter from light, friable or sandy soil.

Mulching should be applied when surface cultivation can no longer be practiced without injuring the roots, but this mulch should be light, so as not to exclude the sun's rays from the surface of the soil. As barnyard manure contains most of the elements necessary and in nearly the proper proportions, it is, if partly decomposed, the safest for this purpose, as it contains few of those caustic properties so prevalent in chemical preparations. If mixed with one-third of its bulk of good loam it retains its nutritive properties for a longer period and does not wash so easily on the bench.

Bone can be added to this compost with benefit in the proportion of a 5-inch potful to each bushel of compost.

Bone and lime or bone and wood ashes should never be used in combination, as

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Seasonable Culture.

By this time your carnation plants are pretty well established and you have got rid of all the weeds. Syringing can be dispensed with, except what is needed to keep down red spider. If you stirred the soil each time you weeded, it will be in nice growing condition. If you have some old stable manure it will do them good to spread over the soil about a half inch of it. This is not for the food there might be in it, but it will prevent the soil from drying out in spots during these bright autumn days. Better put this on before you put the supports in place, whatever kind they may be.

If you did not mix any bone into the soil before planting, and many growers prefer to wait until the plants are established, this is a good time to do it. Stir it into the soil before putting on the mulch, or mix it into the mulch, if you prefer.

Before putting on the supports look over the beds and replant any that have died out. If you have no more of the same variety, don't plant in another kind if you expect to propagate from that batch; that is how mixtures are caused. You won't miss anything by having a few empty spaces. The four plants around each space will soon fill it up and do all the better.

Supports.

Regarding supports, opinions are as varied as the various supports. All agree, however, that a rigid wire support will not do, as one variety may need a space twice as large as another, and so now most of the wire supports are made adjustable, both in regard to size of the ring and the distance of the ring from the ground. These wire supports are very handy for those who grow a general line of plants and may need any part of a bench early in the spring. All you need to do is to remove supports and plants as far as you want to and the bench is clear. In this way they soon pay for themselves.

With the large cut flower growers who plant whole houses of one variety the wire and string method is still most popular. It is put on quickly, is very substantial if put on properly, and is quite inexpensive. The wires last indefinitely, while the string is cheap. These should be put in place as soon as practical, as the blooming shoots will begin to run up and will weight the plants down unless they are supported. A. F. J. BAUR.

MORE STEM-ROT.

We have read very carefully the article "Stem-Rot Again" in the REVIEW for September 7. We wish to offer a "testimonial" of our troubles. On July 11 we planted a bench with about 700 Boston Market from the field. Quite a number of the plants of this variety died in the field before benching time. About ten days after benching the plants began to die, until now we have lost over 300 of the 700 and some of those which we used to replace the dead ones have also died. The plants appear to be healthy until we notice some of them seem to be dried up. The stem is shriveled and hollow in the center. We mixed the soil with manure, bone meal and slaked lime. Have also applied lime to the soil since benching. While our other varieties are not free from the same trouble, yet they are not nearly so bad. S. C.

Since quite a number of plants died from stem-rot in the field, it is quite evident that you brought it into the house that way and all the soil-sterilizing you could have done would have availed nothing. That is one reason why soil sterilization can never be a complete guarantee against this disease. The sterilizing may kill what spores are in the soil, but it does not prevent the introduction of them at any future period.

When plants in the field show signs of stem-rot it is almost impossible to plant them directly on the benches without losing many of them. The moist atmosphere and, during those days, invariably hot temperature just suit this disease and you may be sure that if it was active in the field, where there was plenty of fresh air and sunlight, it will naturally go on a rampage in the house. Usually when a batch of plants shows stem-rot to any great extent in the field we do not house many of the plants. However, if it is a promising seedling or other new variety it pays to go to a little extra trouble to save them. You will find that when you pot the plants into comparatively small pots they will take hold quickly and they will need shading only a few days. Perhaps you have noticed this when you potted some plants to set in where some died out. So if you will pot the plants and then, as soon as they are well rooted, plant them on the benches, there need not be that long, dark, warm and moist period during which the stem-rot usually starts into activity.

Another good idea in case stem-rot starts after planting is to remove enough soil from between the plants to make a furrow deep enough to hold enough water to saturate the soil when filled. This allows you to water the soil without wetting the stems of the plants and if no syringing is done there need be very little moisture in the atmosphere. We have found this very effective. Lime sprinkled over the soil will also help, as lime is a great enemy to all fungous growth.

As you do not say when the manure, bone meal and lime were mixed into the soil I cannot say whether it was done properly or not. I do not think that they had much, if anything, to do with the stem-rotting, since, as you say, it was in the field before you lifted the plants.

The best thing you can do with this bed of Boston Market is to pull up the remainder of the plants and burn them. Take out the soil, wash the bench and paint it with a heavy coat of hot lime wash. Dump the soil where it will not again come in contact with your carnations. To check it among your other varieties do all you can to keep the houses from the ground to the ventilators as fresh and sweet as possible. Plenty of air, no shade on the glass, a little fire heat on cool, damp nights to keep the air stirring, a little sulphur and lime on the steam pipes, will all help. Stop syringing unless you see signs of red spider. I hope your plants are not planted too closely. If the air can circulate between them it will be a great benefit. A. F. J. BAUR.

FAIRY RING.

I have the disease known as fairy ring on a few plants of Lady Bountiful and The Queen. From July until August 28 I did my syringing before 6:30 a. m. in order to get pressure. I never water unless the plants need it. I have been using formaldehyde and Bordeaux mixture. Do you think they should be run dry or ought I to keep them moist? I have used lime and sulphur the last few days but I do not know how that will work. The last few weeks I have syringed once a week to keep spider in check. R. R.

The disease called fairy ring is pretty much the same as the common leaf spot in that it is a fungous disease, and it should be handled the same way. The same remedies will do for both of them. The first thing I want to say to you is don't lose your head. Unless your plants are very badly affected there is no reason why you should not get them back into normal condition in a short time. The remedies you are using are all right if you use them properly. Very often, when plants are affected with disease, the grower gets excited and doses the plants with one thing after another and either floods the soil or allows it to become as dry as powder. The first thing he knows his plants are ruined, more through his treatment than from the disease. Always bear in mind that whatever you apply to the plants, you can not efface the marks of the disease except by picking off the spotted leaves, and before the plants will be clean and look clean they will have to make a new growth, which takes time.

The first thing to do to stop a disease of this kind is to remove all the spotted leaves and burn them. That stops its propagation from the spores which are produced in each spot. Don't stop with this one picking, but go over them every day or two and remove any fresh ones that break out. The best thing we have found to spray with is formaline, which you say you are using. We use it one to 500 of water, though perhaps it can be used a little stronger. If the days are bright you can spray with this every morning but I would not advise you to apply it on cloudy days. If there are several cloudy days in a stretch you might take your bellows and blow the house full of lime and sulphur mixed. Grape-dust is also excellent to use this way. Don't dust it heavily on the plants but blow it up over them. What you want is to dry the atmosphere.

When you begin firing mix the lime and sulphur, and paint a steam pipe with it, not too heavily but just enough so you can notice a difference in the smell of the atmosphere. In fact if the disease seems at all stubborn I would not put off the firing until it just has to be done but would use that means to keep the house dry as well as warm at night and keep the ventilators up a few inches. Like all fungous diseases this one must have moisture to be active and you can do as much by keeping the atmosphere dry and sweet as you can any other way.

Don't carry the roots extremely dry, but give enough water to keep the plants growing vigorously. If you keep the walks and under the benches dry not enough dampness will rise from the soil to hurt. I would dispense with the syringing altogether for a time, unless you see some red spider, and then be sure the day will be bright, so the plants will dry off well before evening.

These fungous diseases are frequently started during the first few weeks after the plants are housed on account of the weakened condition of the plants and the excessive moisture carried in the house to prevent wilting. This excessive moisture and the high temperature which usually prevails during that time just suit these diseases, and that is one reason why it is wise to remove the shade on the glass, stop syringing and let the sunshine and fresh, sweet air sweeten up the house and check whatever disease may have started, just as soon as the plants will stand it.

A BIG LITTLE WORD.

Last week in my answer to "W. L. K." regarding Enchantress, a lagging pen made me say that this variety is a hard one to handle. I did not mean to say that. What a difference it will make when you insert the word "not," as I intended. The balance of the article will bear this out. Those who have grown this grand variety know what a strong grower and easy doer it is, and that you must only give it half a chance and it will show its worth. Outside of the two faults mentioned it is all one could ask for and the faults are not serious in this variety. I can imagine what a wry face our good friend Peter Fisher, the originator, must have made if his eye happened to fall upon that line.

VIOLETS IN FLORIDA.

I would like to know the method of cultivating single violets here in Florida. I suppose California's methods would be best here. The soil is sandy. H. S. P.

I have had no personal experience in growing violets in Florida, but from what I have observed at different times I should try several different methods all the same season, giving each the same care and thereby arriving at the best method by experience for the particular locality where I was attempting to grow them. Of course, one thing is an absolute necessity; that is, a good supply of water. Lacking this I do not think I should even attempt to grow them in your state. One is safe in a general way in observing natural conditions and I have found that through the center of the state the wild violets are very plentiful in all colors, yellow, blue and white; but while I thought at first that I would find them in the hummock land, I did not find them in the pine woods, on the slopes just above the hummocks, which shows that they like the richer ground found near the hummocks, but wanting more air and drainage than they would find in them and yet wanting some shading.

Taking these facts into consideration, and what I have been told by those growing them in a limited way, I should try a bed in the open, under pines. Follow nature as closely as possible, only help her where you can by cultivation, watering, etc. And again, I should try a bed under a lath shed, or sheds somewhat like those used for growing pineapples, but they would never want sides, as violets do not want to be kept close. I should find as cool a situation as possible for all of these experiments.

Again, I should try them in boxes and benches, where I could shade them, and while I personally do not have an idea that I could grow them in this way as well as the other ways, still I know of persons who say that it is the only way they can grow violets there, and they certainly succeed in that way, for I have seen them have the violets.

I hope that the correspondent will be successful and that I may have made some suggestions that will help him, but violets are so capricious that my advice would be to give every method a trial for a season before going at it in a very extensive manner.

If he will give me an idea of his surroundings, etc., if he thinks of anything that looks especially favorable for their culture, I will be glad to make any other suggestions that may come to mind. I would also try all the different kinds in the different trial beds, as nearly always some one variety will take naturally to your locality and the others would only be partially satisfied with the soil, etc. I should be glad if the correspondent would keep us posted as to his success and failure this season.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

[School Gardens, by B. T. Galloway, Bulletin No. 160, Office of Experiment Stations, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.]

The sub-title of this pamphlet is "A report upon some co-operative work with the normal schools of Washington, with notes on the school-garden methods followed in other American cities." The ground covered is the same as that traversed by Miss Susan B. Sipe in her lecture before the S. A. F. at Washington August 16 and, indeed, the illustrations used to supplement the text are chosen from among those which Miss Sipe employed in the stereopticon. The pamphlet, which includes some fifty pages, is a valuable record of a work which is of utmost importance to the horticultural and floricultural interests and it is to be hoped that it will serve to awaken many more school authorities to the fact that gardening is one of the great educational factors no more to be ignored, and vastly more interesting than the mental gymnastics provided by the old-time, dry-as-dust curriculum.

It is to be regretted that it was impossible for Prof. Galloway to put on paper the spirit of enthusiasm Miss Sipe put into her talk. "Cold type" is an expression frequently met; the reader will appreciate one meaning of the phrase if he heard Miss Sipe at the convention. And this leads to the thought that not all school gardening movements are likely to succeed as has the one in Washington; a Miss Sipe is not to be found every day to lead the work. That earnest, thorough, accurate, enthusiastic young lady had established herself high in the fond regard of her audience before she had talked to the S. A. F. five minutes and the more they saw and heard of her the better they liked her.

The school-garden movement has wonderful possibilities however the subject is viewed. Looking at it from a civic standpoint it is deserving of all encouragement, while from a purely trade point of view it holds out possibilities of which the craft should not be slow to avail itself. Trade organizations should assist the school garden work at every opportunity; indeed, should seek ways in which it may be furthered. To start the movement in cities where its merits have not yet been appreciated, or to give it fresh impetus where needed, valuable as is Prof. Galloway's pamphlet, better yet would be the repetition of Miss Sipe's lecture. Every florists' club in a city of good size could well afford to defray the necessary expense to get Miss Sipe to lecture to the school teachers and public of its community.

OMAHA, NEB.—Louis Henderson carried away twelve first prizes, aggregating $175, at the state fair at Lincoln. His large Dutch windmill with revolving arms was the best floral design.

CLUB WELFARE.

[In assuming for the second time the presidency of the St. Louis Florists' Club, J. F. Ammann said in part.]

A president of any organization, while more or less an important factor, cannot possibly have a successful administration without the co-operation of the members and especially those most active in the society. I therefore ask each and every member to co-operate with me in making this the banner year of our society; not only that, but to make it continue to be to our best interest, both financially and socially.

I deem it of importance to call your attention at this time to a few of the most vital questions now before this club. First of all, of course, is the welfare of our club in general. We all realize that when our club is prospering we become of more importance. Harmony is one of the principal objects which we should always have in view. I do not mean that we should always agree on all questions that may arise, for it is expressed differences of opinion which make discussions interesting. But in matters of interest to the club, such as a flower show, or any other important undertaking where the club's reputation is involved, there should be harmony and we should stand shoulder to shoulder to make it a success, regardless of any personal view we may take. We should not let that stand in the way of helping and working for the interest of the cause.

I am very proud to say I believe that in our entire profession we are gradually drifting away from the old selfish view of things. And I dare say we can give no more credit for this pleasant state of affairs to any one thing than to our florists' clubs and societies all over this great country. Therefore let us bear in mind and always be ready and willing to lend a helping hand to the cause that made us what we are today.

Success in business I believe is of vital interest to us all. This can be obtained in no better way than by a discussion of our interests at our club meetings. In fact, our regular club meetings should all be strictly business meetings. I believe the trustees of our club should select subjects for discussion at every regular meeting. The subject should be announced at the meeting before it is to be taken up and these should refer strictly to our business, such as insects and diseases of plants, building and heating, prices and grades of cut flowers, both wholesale and retail, etc. In fact, anything pertaining to our different lines of business. The trustees should name some one to lead each discussion, but the president should be empowered to appoint any one present in case the regular appointee is absent. I believe these discussions would be more interesting and beneficial than essays, for any of us can take part in the discussion, but we are not all essayists.

Next comes the social part of our club. This is by no means a small part of our work. On the contrary, it is really an important part. We should have at least two or more special gatherings, the popularity of which can readily be judged from the large attendance usually brought out on such occasions. Our outdoor summer meetings have proven quite a success and should be continued whenever opportunity presents itself.

The question box should be on the secretary's desk at every meeting and any one wishing to ask a question should write same on a slip of paper and place it in the box any time during the meeting. Any one having stock for sale, or wishing to purchase, should be allowed the use of the question box. If one cannot attend the meeting let him mail his wants to the secretary, whose duty it should be to place the question in the box at the next meeting. I believe this a much better plan than the old way of passing around slips during meetings, and it also saves time.

Advertising is very essential in any business; hence I recommend the press committee as being quite important, but I would advise it not to put in print what could not be verified; at least I find this the better policy.

OGDENSBURG, N. Y.—John Lawrence is installing a rocking grate from the Martin Grate Co., which is supplying grates to so many growers around Chicago.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The revival of trade has not yet reached this city, although the florists, as well as those in all other lines of business are preparing for great activity in fall trade. The past week trade was somewhat better but not enough to call us busy. The quality of the flowers coming to this market averages rather inferior. Some of the rose stock is badly mildewed and asters are making their last run. Carnations are very poor, be they from the field or indoor grown.

Early cosmos has begun to arrive but only in small lots. Chrysanthemums are also showing up in small lots of white, the first bringing $2.50 per dozen. Valley is having a better call, as quite a few fall weddings are reported to take place this week. Outdoor stock has the appearance of autumn, and gladioli, hydrangeas and Clematis paniculata will soon be things of the past for this season.

Carnation growers say that about two-thirds of the carnations are already housed and that the plants are uniformly fine and great crops are expected from them this winter.

Club Meeting.

The club meeting September 14, held at H. J. Weber & Sons' nursery, was attended by forty-five members, many accompanied by their ladies. The Messrs. Weber were in waiting with conveyances to be taken to the place of meeting. On arriving at their beautiful home we were taken in hand by the old gentleman, H. J. Weber, assisted by his sons, Frank A., W. T., W. A. and G. A. Weber, and shown through their large place, where thousands of fruit and ornamental trees, evergreens, shrubs and hardy roses can be seen. The greenhouse men were greatly interested in the two new houses just built, each being 20x148, for roses. The houses were built by Thompson and are fitted out with a large Florence boiler.

The ladies in the meantime were well taken care of by Mrs. Weber and the Misses Weber. Among the ladies present were Mesdames Juengel, Schray, Meinhardt, Beyer, Miller, Weber, Sanders, Pilcher, Beneke, Koenig, Berning, Fillmore, Ude, Jr., Klockenkemper, Steidel, Windler, Jablonsky, Fehr, Guy, Emunds, Angermueller, Misses Maggie and Linnie Meinhardt, Watson, Brunig and Klockenkemper.

The meeting opened at 3 p. m. in the big packing shed, which was especially decorated for the occasion. F. C. Weber stated that good progress is being made and that the success of the fall show is assured. He wanted it understood that no one man is running this show, but the committee together is in charge. The building committee was discharged. The secretary then read a letter from J. F. Windt in regard to "crape pulling." After a big discussion the chair appointed a committee of three, consisting of Messrs. Windt, Beyer and Fillmore, to draw up resolutions for the daily papers to see if we cannot get rid of this element which is now overrunning the city.

The next in order was the installation. The chair appointed J. J. Beneke as installation officer, who called the newly elected officers before him and read to each officer his duty. President Ammann read his address and assumed the duties of his office. All the retiring officers were tendered a vote of thanks for their work of the past year. H. J. Weber was made an honorary member of the club. Refreshments were then served. Everyone voted it to be one of the best meetings we ever had.

Various Notes.

Mr. Burrows, of Pilcher & Burrows, florists' brokers, has returned after a ten days' business trip. The firm's business is increasing each week.

George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill, Mo., spent a few days in the city on business.

Theo. Miller and Fred C. Weber have invited the members of the club on September 27 from 2 to 5 p. m., for an entertainment at Mr. Miller's place, 4832 Delmar avenue. This is in return to the boys for the entertainment given Messrs. Miller and Weber before leaving and upon returning from Europe. A good time is expected.

Carew Sanders, who was reported very sick some time back, is on the road to recovery, but not yet able to leave the house.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The Market.

A spurt of funeral work the past week, combined with renewed activity in outside shipping, has kept the grower busy and in a measure broke the summer quietness. From now on business is expected to be brisk.

Carnations are scarce and short-stemmed, but cool nights will soon lengthen them. Roses are mostly poor, although there are a few that can lay claim to being good. Lilies have been seen at the stores all summer and have met with a ready sale, some cold-storage giganteums, also rubrum and speciosum. Asters are a glut. Violet stock looks fine, and promises a very productive crop.

Various Notes.

Blanksma Bros. are building a new house for cucumbers and lettuce.

Crabb & Hunter have installed a large Morehead trap at their Lake greenhouses, and are finishing an office 20x38. It will be lighted with both gas and electricity.

Henry Smith is kept busy these days, looking after his 150 acres of fruit, to say nothing of the greenhouse business.

Freyling & Mendals have given up their down-town store, believing they can sell all their flowers at their greenhouses, and rumor has it that Chas. Chadwick will in the near future follow suit. Mr. Chadwick is doing without a foreman now. His stock is looking fine.

Wm. Cunningham reports trade beginning to pick up.

A club meeting will be called in the near future. A movement is on foot to have the meetings held at the residences of the members, as in times past such meetings were always well attended and productive of the best results.

The West Michigan State Fair opened September 19. Bruins Slot & Sons, the Grand Rapids Floral Co., Crabb & Hunter and Henry Smith are the floral exhibitors.

It is rumored that James Hancock will open a commission store in Detroit. G. F. C.

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Geo. E. Kessler, the landscape artist who planned the flower show arrangement scheme, has gone to New York and will sail for Europe in a few days, to be absent until after the November exhibition.

ATHENS, O.—Simon Brouwer did not find the output of 3,000 feet of glass sufficient for the demand and has erected another house 15x80 feet.

meetings of the club more regularly than most of the city members, as shown by the last meeting of the club. There were present J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville; E. W. Guy, Henry Emunds, Adolph Fehr, of Belleville; Henry Johann, of Collinsville; John Connon, of Webster Groves; F. W. Ude, Jr., W. J. Pilcher, Wm. Winter, of Kirkwood; James W. Dunford, of Clayton; John Steidel, Mr. Braun and A. Jablonsky, of Central, Mo.

The Growers' Club will meet this week, Wednesday afternoon, at F. W. Ude's place in Kirkwood. The next regular meeting of the club will be held October 18, in Belleville, on invitation of its president, Dr. A. S. Halstead.

The store recently vacated by George Wagner, 4651 Maryland avenue, is again open under the name of Michel, with Harry Rieman as manager.

The official photographer, Rude Windt, took several pictures at the last club meeting, one each of the officers, ladies and the members.

CHOICE ROSES

We are handling very good Roses, Brides, Maids, Chatenay, Liberty and Ivory. They are coming along in fine shape—of course not all long-stemmed, but we can select the grade you want.

Asters have been injured by too much rain but we have as good as are to be had in the market. Carnations plentiful; good flowers, but stems still rather short.

We are headquarters for "Green Goods"; an inexhaustible supply of Asparagus, Smilax, Adiantum, Galax, Ivy Leaves, Leucothoe and Ferns. Send us your orders. We want your business now and all through the season.

Fancy Valley always on hand

DEPARTMENT OF MADE-UP WORK.

While trade is quiet and you do not wish to carry much stock you can rely on our Department of Made-Up Work. We are prepared to execute orders for any kind of funeral piece, from the cheapest to the most expensive. Usual trade discount allowed.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

Business shows another slight improvement this week but stock has retrograded in quality because of unseasonably warm weather lasting through several days. Roses were improving rapidly and a considerable proportion are still of very fair quality, but of course the natural tendency of 86 degrees of heat at this season is to soften the stock perceptibly. The Beauty crop continues nicely adjusted to the needs of the market. Carnations are in large supply but are now practically all from plants under glass. Stems are short but with most of the growers both stems and flowers are all that one could expect from the first crop.

Carnations are doing better this week because the asters were put to the bad by the heavy thunder showers of the past few days. Very few good asters have come into the market this week and all such have had a ready sale. As a large part of the demand is still for funeral flowers, white asters and white carnations have been most sought by the buyers. Dahlias are coming in more heavily but are not wanted in quantity. Most of the retailers use them for window display and occasionally for dinner decorations, but there are few such orders as yet and the dahlia is not a flower which this market can use in more than a limited way.

There continue to be large supplies of valley, but it has a better market than a week ago. Easter lilies are in limited supply and sell well. Violets are now a daily item of stock and have sold well. The quality is nothing extra but they are coming unusually early this year, both locally and from the Poughkeepsie district. Chrysanthemums are not yet in daily supply.

The call for "green goods" is assuming a little more strength. The fall decorations, especially for store openings, will call for a great deal of this stock. There is plenty of it.

On Tuesday evening the weather turned cool with the usual result of checking production. Now that the good asters are pretty well out of the way, nearly everyone would welcome a frost.

Club Meeting.

The first club meeting of the season brought out an attendance of about a dozen. Vice-president J. P. Risch presided. Accumulated routine matters were disposed of and the S. A. F. convention was discussed. There was lively debate as to how the club might get up a head of steam sufficient to carry it clear through the season. It was the apparently unanimous opinion that the first step should be changing the by-laws so as to have only one meeting a month. This cannot be done for another month.

A vase of the new red rose, Etoile de France, was brought from Western Springs by J. S. Wilson. It was given a certificate of merit, the judges especially commending its color, petalage and fragrance.

E. G. Hill, of Richmond, was expected but was unable to be here. He wrote that he hoped to meet with the club in about a month.

Nomination of officers takes place September 28. Leonard Kill is chairman of a committee charged with getting up a slate of workers.

Various Notes.

There was a brief meeting of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society September 18. It is hoped to have the best show of recent years, possibly at Brooke's Casino November 7 to 11. It has been suggested that the show be kept open Sunday as an experiment. This is the practice in Boston. Another committee meeting will be held at F. F. Bentley's office next Monday. President E. G. Uihlein is in Europe.

Friedman is rearranging and redecorating his Van Buren street store. The south side branch has been closed some months but the conservatory there is still in use.

Miss Nellie C. Moore has returned from a very enjoyable trip on the Mississippi. Leonard Kill has had Otto Schwill, Jr., of Memphis, as his guest for a couple of weeks and with him has visited many growers north of town. Mr. Kill says he never saw better average stock than is to be seen this season and expects to see plenty of good stock in the market very soon. Mr. Schwill, who was accompanied by his wife, returned home September 16.

The F. E. Butler Floral Co., on Dearborn street, has rearranged its store, putting in a new and larger ice-box. A window of Tritoma Pfizeri attracted much attention last week.

Lubliner & Trinz were forced to vacate their State street store September 1. They had done business there all summer.

old daughter, Daphne, who is studying music. The daily papers have recently contained accounts of her progress and the favor she has won with Princess Frederick Leopold, the kaiser's sister-in-law. Mrs. Hilmer is expected home in a few months. Mr. Hilmer now concentrates his business enterprises as the Kenwood Floral Co., on Forty-seventh street.

F. F. Benthey plans to spend a day at the Newcastle plant of his firm the latter part of this week.

The creditors of M. Winandy have a plan for purchasing the equity in his plant, taking it out of the hands of the trustees and financing the necessary alterations to put it in first-class shape.

Geo. F. Crabb was over from Grand Rapids again on Saturday, buying more carnation plants. He had to buy 30,000 in all to make up for what he lost by floods.

Albert Fuchs is putting up another large apartment building on the north side.

The A. L. Randall Co. has been receiving Hudson river violets daily since September 13. On Saturday they had over 5,000 which sold at from $1 per hundred down.

The E. F. Winterson Co. is receiving some very fine Perle roses. Eupatorium is a specialty with them.

"All the comforts of a home" are now to be found at Percy Jones' headquarters in the Growers' Market, including a Turkish rug on the floor, a leather couch, etc. Mr. Jones spends eleven hours a day on duty and likes to have pleasant surroundings.

C. W. McKellar has just issued his first catalogue, a neatly printed pamphlet listing a big line of supplies, etc. Cable address "Charkell."

Mons Olson, with Zech & Mann, is on the sick list this week.

O. P. Bassett has to take good-naturedly a great many inquiries as to how he likes Aurora now. He is president of the Pictorial Printing Co. which he moved to Aurora just after a series of labor troubles in Chicago—and now the plant is tied up by a printers' strike for an eight-hour day.

A balcony for office purposes is being built along the east end of E. H. Hunt's store. It will largely increase the facilities for the office force and the cut flower department. Hunt's is already doing quite a business in wild smilax, which they will have constantly on hand from now to the end of the season. The fourth shipment arrived this week.

Some of the aster growers are putting sash over their plants to prolong the season.

J. A. Budlong cut his first blooms of Fiancee September 18, fine flowers but very light in color.

P. J. Hauswirth and wife returned on Monday from their trip to Nashville and Louisville.

Peter Neppon, 4633 Murphy avenue, is building greenhouses costing $3,000.

A little son has arrived at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Meyer, at Morton Grove.

Among the week's visitors were Mrs. Wm. Dittman, New Castle, Ind., and Mrs. A. H. McDonald, Logansport, Ind.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Mondays are keeping up their reputation for storms. The third in succession swept over the east the beginning of the present week. This week will see the end of the September gales and the good ship ought to have smooth sailing from now on until November. Everybody in the wholesale and retail cut flower line seems to have set the opening day ahead to October 15.

Nevertheless, violets, those harbingers of society's advent, are already in the market, thousands of them, colorless, unscented, abnormally early and unsalable because of large shipments. The next thing will be the commonplace distribution by the street merchants and their prestige will be gone for the year. With the enormous additions made this summer to the violet factories, overproduction seems inevitable. The market gives promise of a flood. One expert prophesies that within a few weeks the flowers will be sold at $1 a thousand, in which case the funeral of the goose that laid the golden egg will be celebrated and another chapter in human ambition closed. "Too much of a good thing" is bad and there will undoubtedly be too many violets.

Oncidiums, dendrobiums in several varieties and Cattleya labiata are arriving freely and the retail windows on Broadway and Fifth avenue are using them to advantage and beginning again to look attractive after months of comparative neglect.

Carnations are improving rapidly. Some excellent stock is now in the market and prices are encouraging. Asters and gladioli show no diminution in quantity, but the rains have played havoc with their quality and only the perfect stock brings a profitable price. The best Beauties are advancing. Roses of all kinds are rapidly improving in merit and slight advances are noted in prices for the selected stock.

Dahlias are abundant. Grand stock from Peacock, of Atco, N. J., comes daily to W. H. Gunther, who controls the output from this section and reships to all prominent cities in New England.

Various Notes.

The state of Pennsylvania has just placed an order for a greenhouse 33x116 with the Burnham Hinchings Pierson Co., to be placed in the grounds of the Hospital for the Insane at Warren, Pa. This firm is also building a fine house at South Braintree, Mass., for E. Hollingsworth and several at Syracuse for F. R. Hazard and at Pittsburg for E. B. Lord. They have also designed and will build a spacious conservatory in the rear of Fleishman's new Fifth avenue store at the corner of Forty-third street. Chas. Dietz, of West Hoboken; H. J. Stern, of Highwood, N. J.; Peter Roemer, of Woodlawn, and H. G. Eyres, of Ogden, N. Y., are also building and everywhere increased activity in greenhouse construction is evident.

John A. Scollay, Brooklyn, is installing four 200 horse-power Invincible steam boilers for the city of New York. This firm reports a very rapidly increasing business, far in excess this season of any in its history. J. W. Crowell, of Hartford, is building a greenhouse this fall, up-to-date in all respects, and among others reported are R. D. Jaques, of Lynbrook, L. I.; John T. Pirie, of Sea Cliff, N. Y.; L. C. Carlsen, of Long Branch, N. J.; Myers & Son, of Scottsdale, Pa., and L. C. Harris, of Perryopolis, Pa. All of the above are using the Scollay boiler.

The employees of the wholesale cut flower houses are making arrangements for a grand ball, to be held on the evening of January 13 at the American Opera House.

Jos. J. Suplee has been appointed manager of L. Mutino's new store at 1274 Broadway.

John Seligman, the wholesaler, and Jos. J. Levy, lieutenant of A. J. Guttman, have been enjoying a few days at Niagara Falls.

Harry Bunyard, with A. T. Boddington, has returned from his "outing" at the Alexian Bros. Hospital, of Elizabeth, N. J., quite recovered from a struggle with his old enemy, rheumatism, and ready for the strenuous traveling which this enterprising house has made necessary if its many customers are to be seen even once a year. The warerooms at 342 West Fourteenth street were crowded to the doors with shipments when I called last week and the deserved success which Mr. Boddington has developed far exceeds expectations.

C. H. Totty, of Madison, N. J., is sending fine stock of the Richmond rose to market through Jos. H. Fenrich.

Now that New York has several wholesale plant stores, the conveniences for the retailer are wonderfully and promptly helpful and much appreciated.

A. J. Guttman is much pleased with his change of location to Twenty-eighth street and his added conveniences and elegant offices. He reports a big demand for Victory. Twenty-eighth street will soon be a "double decker" at its present rate of progress, a quartette of wholesale florists being already installed on the parlor floors. A few years should see the whole street from Sixth avenue to Broadway entirely devoted to floriculture. Concentration would mean prosperity for all.

W. F. Sheridan has returned from his annual visit to his growers up the Hudson, with glowing reports as to the outlook.

Brooklyn is reaching out for talent across the bridge and the big department store of Abraham & Straus has coralled C. H. Grant, formerly with Small & Sons and later in his own store at Forty-third street and Seventh avenue. An up-to-date flower department will be managed by Mr. Grant.

Novelties in carnations are again on deck at John Young's from the Cottage Gardens.

J. K. Allen has been touring among his many growers and laying foundations for a big season.

Wm. Ford, of Ford Bros., has also been away for his annual pastoral calls and, in fact, every wholesaler is taking advantage of the lull to shake hands with the men who "toil and spin" in the greenhouses and on whose ability and faithful attention to business rests the whole structure of New York floriculture.

A. J. Fellouris has a big stock of ferns and galax stowed away in preparation for the winter season. He has added to his force lately and is doing a large shipping business.

Charles Millang's conservatory is filled to the doors with a splendid collection of plants of all kinds suitable for the retail florist and his facilities for prompt delivery and the excellence of his stock from the best growers make him a necessity in the wholesale plant trade of the big city. In this department he has built up a wonderful business in the last few years.

This week Wednesday and Thursday comes the American Institute's dahlia show and autumn exhibition and next week the gardeners' societies in every direction will get busy. This one at the American Institute will be "hoary with age" for it is the seventy-fourth annual. Only a few of us can remember when they began.

The auction season is in full swing and Wm. Elliott & Sons report good stock, good crowds and good business at their new place at 201 Fulton street. They have another big sale announced for next Tuesday, September 26, and the catalogue shows a fine lot of decorative plants, also field-grown carnations, ferns and bulbs.

Bowe and many of the other prominent retailers think business is earlier and more encouraging than it was a year ago. They are very optimistic as to the season's prospects.

Flatbush bowling is a thing that can be wagered on safely every Thursday evening. I have never known it to fail in fifteen years, and for fifteen years before that they tell me the good work has been recorded. Last Thursday the Dailedouze boys, Riley, Louis Schmutz, John Scott and Clem Wocker disported themselves, making their usual good records of 150 and over, with the veteran Schmutz absorbing most of the "pots" and showing few evidences of his 60 years.

The Market.

Conditions continue to improve in the flower markets. There is little advance in prices, but good stock sells readily and there is little surplus left over. American Beauties improve and some very fine flowers are now seen. There is also a distinct improvement in Brides and Maids, although many small flowers of these still come in and are cleared at low figures. Carnations are still scarce. An increasing number are coming in from the new indoor crop, but stems are rather short. One or two growers continue to bring in very good outdoor-grown ones, those from Wm. Nicholson being especially fine.

Asters continue abundant, the varieties Vick's Branching, Semple's and Victoria being mostly seen. Gladioli are on the wane and will soon be over. Lily of the valley and lilies sell quite well. Dahlias, tuberose, cosmos, scarlet salvia and other seasonable flowers are seen but there is no particular call for any of these. A few Fitzwygram chrysanthemums were seen this week and single violets.

Gardeners' and Florists' Club.

The first meeting after the summer vacation, on September 19, brought out a splendid attendance, many new faces being seen. The sports committee presented a report in regard to the prizes offered at the recent picnic, which showed that they performed their duties most efficiently. The committee on the form of awards to be used by the club showed samples of the new certificates, which all seemed to be pleased with. These differ from those usually awarded, being more in the nature of reports on what the committee consider the particular merits of the exhibits staged.

Those who may have felt in the least pessimistic in regard to the future success of the club must have felt cheered as the lengthy list of applications was read, the largest addition the club has had at one time in its history. The new members included florists, private gardeners, nurserymen and prominent Boston flower store proprietors. Already promises are forthcoming of a further addition in October, when it is expected J. A. Pettigrew will give the club an account of his European tour.

A number of members gave interesting vacation experiences. There was good music, and last, but not least, refreshments, and all present voted the meeting a grand one in every respect. President Wheeler and other officers went home delighted with the opening meeting for the fall, determined to present such attractions at succeeding meetings as would continue to draw large audiences and make the club the best of its kind in America. In our next we will note a few features we have not time to refer to now.

Various Notes.

The big September show reported elsewhere in this issue, brought in a large number of visitors from a distance. On September 17 a delegation from New Bedford attended. A few from a distance noted were G. F. Struck, representing Lager & Hurrell; Thomas Knight, of Julius Roehrs Co.; J. S. Hay, of the H. A. Dreer Co.; E. C. Green, Warwick, R. I.; Thomas W. Head, Groton, Conn.

We experienced the first cool snap of the season on the evenings of September 13 and 14. In low localities slight frost damages to flowers and vegetables were reported.

At the Worcester East Fair held in Clinton, September 13 to 15, there is always a splendid floral display. The exhibition last week was no exception to the rule. E. W. Breed, of Clinton, secured first for floral design, for group of plants arranged for effect and for herbaceous perennial flowers, the latter including a fine dark form of Helenium autumnale. F. A. Blake, of Rochdale, was first for an extra fine vase of flowers, also for gladioli. W. L. Wheeler, Berlin, showed an excellent seedling gladiolus, yellow striped with rose. Bayard Thayer, Wm. Anderson, gardener, had a beautiful tank of aquatics. E. V. R. Thayer, E. O. Orpet, gardener, and N. Thayer, J. T. Clark, gardener, each had splendid groups of foliage and flowering plants. The two vegetable collections of N. Thayer and J. E. Thayer, each filling a space of 4x35, would be hard to duplicate at any show. A. P. Meridith's collection won. A. A. Hixon, of Worcester, judged the plants and flowers at the fair.

On and after October 1, Welch Bros. will have a stall in the new Music hall market, where they will offer for sale all kinds of florists' supplies, corrugated cut flower boxes, hardy ferns, galax leaves and other necessities. This should prove a great convenience to many of the sellers and buyers in this market.

Mr. and Mrs. William Nicholson have been enjoying a vacation in New Hampshire the past fortnight.

The floral tributes at the funeral of the Hon. Patrick A. Collins, mayor of Boston, on September 18, were the most numerous and costly ever seen here on a similar occasion. T. F. Galvin furnished a large number of choice designs. The most noteworthy was one from the city of Boston representing the city seal and was eight feet square. It was made on a plaque covered with some thousands of white asters. The seal was made of purple asters to represent Boston harbor, the ships being made of lily of the valley. The city itself was made of white violets and the state house's gold dome of yellow oncidiums. There were large clusters of American Beauties on the sides and white roses with bunches of orchids, gladioli and lily of the valley. The base was composed of cycas leaves, Asparagus plumosus and adiantum. William E. Doyle furnished a number of very handsome designs. One in the form of an Irish cross of roses, lily of the valley and adiantum for W. H. R. Redmond, M. P., was unique. Other leading florists in Boston and throughout New England furnished many other designs and a large number came from other states.

There was a very lavish display of floral gifts on the occasion of the opening of the Henry Siegel Co.'s new store on September 11, numerous magnificent horseshoes, baskets and other floral remembrances coming from Boston, New York and Chicago. American Beauty roses were to be seen in thousands. A horseshoe of these ten feet high from the R. H. White Co. was especially fine.

N. F. McCarthy & Co. have made a successful protest against an assessment of duty on an importation of sun-bleached wheat. The local collector classed the wheat as dutiable but Mr. McCarthy contended that it was free under the paragraph of the law relating to crude textile grasses or fibrous vegetable substances. The evidence showed that the only process through which the wheat had passed was that known as sun-bleaching.

AN EVANS INVENTION.

When John Evans announces something new in the way of improved ventilating apparatus the trade is apt to accept his judgment and adopt his device without serious consideration, for it has been proved by experience that when Mr. Evans says a thing is thus and so, it does what he says it will, and does it promptly and without coercion. At the recent Washington convention of the S. A. F., Mr. Evans' concern, the Quaker City Machine Co., of Richmond, Ind., was given a certificate of merit on what is called the Twentieth Century ventilator arm, a device so beautifully simple that the only wonder is Mr. Evans did not think of it years before. The first grower who saw it wanted to trade, even, all his old arms for new ones!

Scientifically the new arm reduces the leverage on the shafting from eight to twelve inches, as in the old style, to one and three-quarters inches, the distance from the center of the shafting pipe to the rivets which hold the arms. Practically the result is to do away with the strain on the shafting which sometimes caused it to twist on long runs and not open the last ventilator to an even height with the first one. With this arm the ventilators will rise to an even height on any length of greenhouse.

There is a double action in the "X" part of the new arm which increases the power of the arm without increasing the leverage on the shafting. For large ventilators, which require a long arm to give the proper opening, the only necessary change is the enlargement of the "X" part and the lengthening of the reach rod. Mr. Evans has applied for a patent on his invention.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The first gun of the fall campaign has been fired. The big department stores are having their openings this week, using great quantities of hydrangeas, gladioli, dahlias, golden rod, autumn foliage, etc., while most of the staple cut flowers are not used. The decorations prove that people are returning to the city, a sure sign of coming business. The volume of business is increasing slowly. The receipts are larger than one week ago, while the demand is absorbing the stock offered, nearly, if not quite, as well.

Beauties are very fine, but not in such active demand. Choice tea roses, on the contrary, are selling better. Carnations are again a factor, as the well-grown indoor stock is making its appearance. Dahlias are exceptionally fine. C. W. Bruton is maintaining its popularity as the leading yellow. Gardenias are coming in crop. Indications point to a fair supply for the October weddings. Wild smilax has been in demand for the decorations.

Some New Ideas.

It may interest some of our readers to know that the new square pot covers are gaining in popularity. They are pleasing in appearance and the plant is easily released. Ribbons are now being made in eight or ten shades of green, which will match the color of any foliage to perfection. These foliage-colored ribbons, when combined with ribbons that match the flowers, are very effective. For instance, a bunch of American Beauties may be tied with a sash of Beauty ribbon and foliage-green ribbon in very good taste. Similar pleasing effects may be produced in a variety of shades of these delicately colored ribbons. There is a growing feeling that more attention must be paid to the profitable disposal of the poorer grades of cut flowers and for this purpose a demand must be developed for design work on improved methods. There are great possibilities for artistic work in this line.

A Chinese Village.

Fred J. Michell called Phil's attention to an original window display at his company's store this week. The window represented a Chinese village, with the family hard at work in the field among the sacred lilies. Green shaded electric lights lit up the scene beautifully. Philip Fried, who arranged the window, said the demand for Chinese lilies had increased wonderfully in consequence.

Home Again.

Ed. Reid returned to this city on Saturday after three weeks spent in the sunny south. Mr. Reid visited Florida, Georgia, the Carolinas, Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia. His welcome everywhere was typical of the warm-hearted southerner. In fact, Mr. Reid thinks that sometimes his host purposely made him miss his train, were such a thing possible. He made business arrangements for the coming season with some new and many old customers, who were kind enough to say that his stock was of the finest and his packing of the best. year?" Mr. Reid said, "No, it would be better."

Various Notes.

Hugh Graham decorated three large department store fall openings this week.

J. J. Habermehl's Sons had a large decoration for Strawbridge & Clothier's opening on Monday.

The Wm. Graham Co. had a large decoration at Gimbel Bros. on Monday.

The Leo Niessen Co. is receiving fine Beauties, Gates and Meteors from George Burton.

Samuel S. Pennock returned from his vacation on Monday and is hard at work in harness again.

Eugene Bernheimer is making a specialty of autumn foliage.

Wm. R. Gibson, of Charleston, S. C., is spending a week under the doctor's care in his home in this city.

H. H. Battles has completed work on his new store at 110 South Twelfth street. Two stores thrown into one present a very handsome appearance, the woodwork painted a deep green. The show windows are ornamented with specimens of Adiantum Farleyense grown at Newtown Square, Ficus pandurata and Cibotium Schiedeii.

Charles E. Meehan and family returned from Ocean City this week.

A large and representative party of members of the Philadelphia Florists' Club and their families visited Acto last Saturday afternoon as the guests of the L. K. Peacock Co. and spent a delightful afternoon among the dahlias.

Watkins & Nicholson, of Lakeview Greenhouse, Hammonton, N. J., decorated for a large church wedding recently. The color scheme in the church was white and green, using 2,000 asters, 1,000 feet of smilax and 100 palms and ferns. At the house where the reception was held they used smilax, palms, ferns and fancy-leaved caladiums. They find that fancy-leaved caladiums are fine for decorations.

The Pennsylvania Horticultural Society had its September meeting last Tuesday. Dahlias and asters were the features.

The dahlia crates blocking the sidewalk in front of 1237 Filbert street were found to belong to William J. Moore.

Edward Habermehl predicts a busy October.

Wyncote.

Joseph Heacock has experienced an unusually heavy demand for palms during the past summer. His stock of kentias is so large and so well managed that this can only be detected by a careful comparison of the houses as they were in June and are now in September. The houses are full; they are always kept full. Children will grow, you know. The visitor who walks through the palm houses is quickly convinced that Mr. Heacock's kentias are as fine as they can be grown. Nephrolepis Scottii, Cibotium Schiedeii and Dracena terminalis are looking well.

The houses devoted to American Beauties are in prime condition, some 10,000 plants all in benches ready for the season. The carnations have just this country and reflects the greatest credit on Mr. Peacock.

The Ideal Salesman.

The REVIEW realizes that the position of a cut flower and plant salesman is one of importance to the grower, to the wholesaler, to the retailer and to the consumer. The REVIEW believes that a high standard among the salesmen will do much to promote the interests of all those who buy or sell cut flowers or plants, and to promote harmony among them. The REVIEW therefore proposes a prize essay competition similar to that held by the S. A. F. under the following conditions:

The subject of the essay shall be "The Ideal Salesman."

Each competitor shall mail his essay, unsigned, on or before September 30, 1905, to Phil, care of any of the wholesale cut flower houses in this city.

Each essay must be unsigned, accompanied by the writer's name and address in a sealed envelope. This envelope will not be opened until the awards have been made.

The essays and sealed envelopes will be numbered when received and the essays will be submitted to a competent judge. His awards will be announced in the Review of October 12. The first prize will be $10, the second prize $5.

It is especially desired that the essays be clear, concise and to the point.

Concentration.

[Respectfully dedicated to R. C. Hayden.]

'Tis said the time is near
For a most startling change.
Landmarks will disappear;
Old groups will rearrange.

The giant Land Title
Annex on South Broad street
Is where this modern sight'll Astound'd mankind greet.

There from the roof so high
Will swing a massive sign,
As though hung from the sky;
On it a single line.

Men at this sign will stare,
And wink and rub the dust
From both their eyes, for there
They'll read "THE FLOWER TRUST."

Each flower'll have a floor;
Its name may be described
On elevator door,
As swiftly up you glide.

Our florists, nary one
There'll be to hold aloof;
All business will be done
Under this mighty roof.

I will endeavor to describe to the readers of the REVIEW the events of a day spent in the Chester valley by two Philadelphia visitors. The Haddenfield Show.

L. K. Peacock made a magnificent exhibition of dahlias in the Haddenfield show last week. He staged over 500 varieties of dahlias. Fully fifty of these varieties were equal to any of the early chrysanthemums. Some could scarcely be distinguished from chrysanthemums except by the foliage. The flowers were all on long stems, each variety by itself, correctly labeled. The exhibition, which was open from Tuesday until Saturday, was the finest dahlia show ever given in on this occasion, in fact their paths sometimes cross, still they always get on well together, like David and Jonathan of old.

It so happened that Jonathan was first at the gate of the early Oxford accommodation at Broad street station. Jonathan likes to be first, but when the gate closed and he had to board the train without David his anxiety was awakened. A careful search through the train showed that David had not slipped across the platform from an inbound train and Jonathan was about to leave the train at West Philadelphia when luckily for my story David appeared calm and unmoved, merely remarking as he boarded the Oxford train that his local train was late eight minutes.

The pair left the train at West Grove, where they were met by a team from the Conard & Jones Co. that quickly brought them up the new Telford road to the company's offices where President Alfred F. Conard and Secretary Robert Pyle extended a hearty greeting. Another eighth of a mile and the visitors have left the front seats of their conveyance and are shaking hands with Antoine Wintzer, in the big packing-room where the orders that go out all over the world are packed.

David explained that they wanted to see as many places as possible, so they would see the houses and cannas as quickly as possible, but Mr. Wintzer was so earnest in his wish that they should see the whole place, and so cordial in his invitation to dine with him at his home, that it was voted churlish to decline and off the trio started through the houses.

The roses planted out for propagation embrace nearly all the well known hybrid teas and teas, besides a number of climbers, so called semi-climbers, hybrids, polyanthas, etc., of the present and of the past. The latest novelties of the day, French, German and American, may be found side by side with old favorites now hard to find elsewhere. Of the newer sorts Etoile de France is looking well. Richmond and R. O. English are not. Probably they will improve under the system of treatment which from now on produces such excellent growth.

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.

During the absence of a regular exhibit by the florists of the state, the floral department at the state fair in Pueblo has become the one important show in which the trade exhibits for prizes and advertising. The show held September 11 to 15 was the most complete in several years and from present prospects there will be a number of entries from outside next year.

The plant exhibit was especially good, owing to the efforts of John Sked, of the Park Floral Co., of Denver, who came in with some very fine palms and specimen plants of Nephrolepis Elegan-tissima.

NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

The third annual fall exhibition of the New Bedford Horticultural Society was held in City Hall September 14 to 16, and proved a very successful one, being superior to that held in 1904. The schedule comprised nearly 200 classes, about sixty being devoted to dahlias. These latter made a tremendous display, W. C. Winter, C. Pierce, G. H. Walker and other prominent growers being among the exhibitors. There were a large number of special prizes donated by Peter Henderson & Co., H. A. Dreer Co., W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Arthur Cowee, J. K. Alexander, Schlegel & Fottler Co. and others.

The officers of the society are: William Keith, president; J. C. Forbes, clerk; F. C. Barrows, vice-president; W. A. Gibbs, treasurer. The executive committee consists, in addition to the officers, of Dennis Shea, H. A. Jahn, James Garthley, A. J. Fish and George N. Borden.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

CALIFORNIA brown mustard seed is now quoted at $4\frac{1}{4}$ to $4\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound.

CLOVER seed has ranged close to $7, October delivery, at Toledo the past week.

At Chicago, the timothy seed market is around $3.45 for October and $3.40 for March.

THE Pretoria from Hamburg landed thirty-three cases and ninety-six bags of seeds at New York September 17.

SUNFLOWER seed at 10 cents a pound does not suit the poultrymen. It will be cheaper, however, when the new crop comes in.

FROM the present outlook dealers in seed potatoes predict high prices for seed stock and look forward to a good demand next spring.

FLAX seed is off sharply in price, cash No. 1 northwestern having declined to 98 cents at Chicago, in sympathy with the Duluth and Minneapolis markets.

THE Michigan cucumber fields promise a fair crop of seed. The fruits seem to be well filled out and ought to produce well. Cutting will begin in the course of a week or two.

PEAS are now being delivered to the receiving stations and the samples are reported satisfactory. The quantities delivered are below estimates recently made and the general feeling is that the crop will be short.

THE Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y., has issued its annual report on the onion crop, placing it at 3,226,202 bushels as against 3,466,993 bushels in 1904. The acreage this year is 14,003 as against 12,810 last year.

REVISED reports from California are more encouraging. Seventy-five per cent of a full delivery is promised now, where forty to fifty per cent was promised some time ago. This refers to several important items and comes from different sources.

WHILE the deliveries of peas have been backward, the reverse is the case with beans. An early harvest insures, as a rule, a bright sample. In this respect the bean crop this year promises all that could be desired, the only trouble being that there will not be enough to go around.

ONION sets are being milled and the shrink from what is termed "field measure" will lessen the crop more than any grower anticipated. The maximum shrink from field measure for many years past has not been over twenty-five per cent; this year thirty-three and one-third per cent will hardly cover it.

DUTCH BULBS.

The report from Holland is that bulb shipments have practically come to an end, and planting operations of bulb stocks are in full swing. As regards trade, it may be said that hyacinths sold at very low prices but cleared out well. Crocus was in better demand than last season and command much firmer prices.

Tulips have been in unusual demand and all the leading sorts have gone up sharply in price. Some sorts are not to be had at any price. This has been caused partly by the short crop, but without doubt the demand for tulips generally, both for forcing and for bedding-out purposes has also grown enormously. May-flowering Darwin tulips are moving very slowly.

THE ERFURT SEED CROPS.

A correspondent of the Horticultural Trade Journal writes as follows from Erfurt, Germany, under date of September 1:

On the whole our summer has been very favorable. There have been some destructive hailstorms in central Germany, but they have with one or two exceptions spared the Erfurt district; indeed, it is quite fourteen years since really serious damage was done here by a fall of hail.

Castling a look round the fields it is evident that we shall have a good crop of carrots. Radishes are middling. Onions are under average, a few sorts being extremely scarce. Turnips are good, and also swedes, of which, however, only a small acreage is out. Cabbages are not looking very well, but of these, especially the drumhead kinds, there is a very large stock of strong growing seed on hand from last season. Round-seeded peas are turning out fairly plentiful, but the wrinkled varieties are coming in rather under estimate, especially some of the earlier sorts, such as Gradus. Broad beans are in a good shape at present, and Dwarf Kidney beans promise a medium crop. As regards Runners it is yet too soon to say anything definite. Leeks promise a fair yield, and lettuces should give a plentiful supply of seed if no disease attacks the plants between now and harvest-time. Spinach is somewhat under average, and prices are opening higher than those prevailing last season. Mangels and sugar beets are likely to yield well, but stocks are all but exhausted and values are sure to advance on those last quoted. Cauliflower, kale, parsley, parsnip and most of the herbs are doing well, and there is not likely to be any shortage worth mentioning in the supply.

Flowers are having a good time this season, the weather being exactly suited to most of our local specialties. Stocks and wallflowers are seeding well. The pansy crop has not quite come up to expectations and prices are quoted a little higher, but the supply will probably equal the demand. Sweet peas have yielded well, and, as the California crop is reported short, intending buyers will do well to turn their attention to Erfurt-grown sweet peas, which are an excellent sample and can be delivered earlier in the season than the American. Nasturtiums are an average crop, though somewhat reduced by hail and black fly. Most other annuals are in a flourishing condition. Asters are now beginning to make their annual display, and the broad stretches of plants are slowly developing the rich and varied tints, which make a drive round the Erfurt flower fields so charming at this season of the year. The plant is not quite so strong as could have been wished and the crop is not likely to be more than an average one.

GRASS SEED CROPS.

A. Le Coq & Co., Darmstadt, Germany, write September 1 that grass seed crop reports will, they think, need no further modification. The necessary conditions for a good development of the plants and seeds were wanting. The continued drought last year was followed by a snowless winter, and this, as well as a dry spring with always changing temperature, followed by continued heat all summer, was very unfavorable to the development of seeds. With few exceptions the harvest has been unsatisfactory.

Agrostis stolonifera (German species) has not yet been thrashed, but in some districts nothing at all was harvested, while others have only a small crop. Prices will therefore be higher than last year.

Less of Alra flexuosa has been harvested and only small quantities of Alra caespitosa have been brought in.

The crop of Alopecurus pratensis is much below that of last season.

The yield of Anthoxanthum odoratum is smaller than last year and the seeds are in many cases not well developed.

We have no definite reports yet as to the crop of Avena elatior from France. Austria and Germany have only small quantities. If France, as it looks, has a good harvest we shall see somewhat lower prices.

The yield of Bromus inermis is under the average.

The reports about Cynosurus cristatus vary very much, but we look for somewhat lower prices.

The expectations for a good crop of Dactylis glomerata in New Zealand were disappointed. Our home crop has no influence on the market, and if France has not an abundant crop, which we doubt, we think prices will have a little advance.

Festuca duriuscula and ovina were disappointing. Festuca arundinacea (elatior) has suffered much from the drought. The yield will be hardly one quarter of last year's and we shall see very high prices for this species. Festuca ovina tenuifolia has given such poor results in south Germany as we have not had for years past. The best samples are sure to secure high prices. Our crop of Festuca heterophylla, as well as Festuca rubra, has been very small; the latter has also in New Zealand yielded only a deficient crop.

The harvest of Lolium perenne is very good, and we shall have best seed at moderate prices. Lolium italicum is the same good crop.

Phalaris arundinacea has yielded a good crop. Prices will be lower.

Poa nemoralis has not been able to develop, in consequence of the unfavorable weather we had in spring. The harvest is in quantity as well as quality much inferior to last year's. Poa trivialis is about one-tenth less than last season but of fine quality.

The crop of alfalfa (of Provence) has turned out much better than anticipated. The coming crop of Turkestan alfalfa is expected to be an average one only, and as the demand for this species is increasing every year, we look for higher prices than last year.

We have no doubt of a poor crop of white clover, and the market for this article is firm and prices are advancing.

The first reports of Trifolium incarnatum were very favorable, but the expectations were disappointed and high prices still prevail.

CLEANING CUCUMBER SEED.

I wish to inquire the best method of removing the seed from ripe cucumbers, when they should be gathered and how to separate the seed from the pulp.
W. C. P.

The best method of separating cucumber seeds from the pulp is to let it ferment in its own juice, then wash it thoroughly and place upon racks to dry. To remove the pulp, cut the fruits open and scoop the seeds with their juice into a barrel and let it remain in the barrel until the fermentation has loosened the seeds from the pulp. Cut the fruits when they are fully ripe, but before they break open of themselves, avoiding in this way parts of the rind getting into the barrel in the cutting operation.

When seed is grown in a large way machines are sometimes used to grind the fruits, rind and all, into the barrels, but it takes machinery to clean out the parts of the rind when crushed in this way and the hand process is recommended to small growers in preference to the machine. The seed will not spoil as long as it remains in its own juice, but as soon as water is added to facilitate the cleaning of the seed from the pulp, the sooner the seed can be got out and dried the better, as it will spoil quickly when water is added. The cleaner the operator can get the pulp and seed into the barrel the easier will be the process of getting the seed out quickly and clean. Many methods of cutting and scooping the seed into the barrels are adopted. The most convenient way is to have a slanting table narrowed to the front, similar to that used in a hay cutting machine. Fix a chopping knife at a convenient place on one side of the wide portion and a wooden, spoon-shape contrivance on the other. Throw the rinds over to the ground and push the scooped-out pulp into the barrel at the narrow end. Clothes-poles and cheese-cloth make good drying frames.

NEW ORLEANS.

A Bit of Trade History.

The people of New Orleans are great buyers of flowers. The climate being mild, plants may easily be kept in pots or outside in the open ground, and saved over the winter with very little protection.

Fifteen years ago plants were sold only at the French market on Sunday morning. Half a dozen florists had stands on the levee, in front of the Mississippi river, and opposite the fish market. The plants in pots were ranged on the pavement, in the open air, without any kind of covering, each florist paying every time a small fee to the collector. The season started with the end of January and lasted until the end of June, no florist showing himself in the summer months or during the fall and part of the winter months.

Now, and since the last few years, plants are brought to at least twenty different markets and almost all the year around without interruption. There are now about twenty-five florists who follow the market business more or less regularly. They bring a wagon-load at a time, a great variety of plants, according to the time of the year. Good plants find a ready sale. Our people are good judges, and what is said for flowers can be also applied to plants, nothing is too good for New Orleans.

Prices were higher some years ago, but the quantity of plants disposed of was less and the time of selling shorter. We can say that the business is now on a large increase. Loose flowers and made-up bouquets of home-grown flowers are also to be found almost every day of the year at these markets.

Several attempts have been made to open a wholesale market for field-grown roses and flowers to supply the trade, and greenhouses have been built to meet the great demand for roses and carnations during the winter months, and no doubt with better understanding of our climate and mode of culture we will be able, in the near future, to supply ourselves with these products.

While there are a few peddlers offering plants on the streets during the spring season, the fakir business of selling flowers around town has not been a factor, only a few loose carnations and boutonnières being offered on Canal street during the carnival season.

It is also to be noted that New Orleans has comparatively few flower stores. Some of our up-to-date florists have selling rooms attached to their greenhouses, but the number of our regular retail flower stores is no more than four or five, all being located in the same neighborhood, almost touching each other. It seems that New Orleans, with a population of 300,000 people, should have room for more.

Various Notes.

Geo. Thomas, for many years gardener to Mrs. Chas. Whitney, on St. Charles avenue, has established himself at the corner of Calhoun and Claiborne streets.

E. Valdejo has been busy all the summer building houses, not greenhouses, but gray-painted, two-story residences. He believes in taking a little rest after twenty years of hard work, having been established since 1885. He thinks, and we all agree with him, that the collecting of rent is not quite so hard as the making and marketing of plants. He will stand as one more proof of what attention and fair dealing bring in the florist business. Fine plants have always been his specialty and he has still a fine lot of them. He makes hanging baskets by the hundreds and says that the Anna Foster fern makes

The Market.

Business is beginning to show evidence of improvement. There is much more snap to the demand and with this there is an improvement in the price, which is thankfully received. With the home-coming of our best flower-buying public there ought to be a decided improvement this week.

The quality of the stock that is coming in is improving rapidly. Beauties are not very plentiful but the quality is good. They sell well. Some fine Brides and Maids are coming now and the price has advanced about a cent all around. A few Kaiserin go fairly well. Golden Gate and Ivory sell well. Some Meteor and Liberty go fairly well, but they are not quite up to standard yet.

Carnations continue to improve and the best bring $2 per hundred. There is good valley to be had at all times. Gladioli and asters are still on the market and are selling much better now. We look for our first mums this week. Smilax is scarce and the demand for all kinds of "greens" is heavy.

Various Notes.

Fred Gear and wife have just returned from a visit at Atlantic City. Fred is fitting up a first-class office over his store.

Mrs. Frank Benson has just returned from a visit in Nebraska.

Wm. McFadden has sold his interest in the Rosebank greenhouses and store and is devoting his time to editing a paper.

W. H. Gear is back from the north and reports having had a fine time.

W. Rehm, of New Orleans, was a visitor, as also was Martin Reukauf, of Philadelphia.
C. J. OHMER.

KANSAS CITY.

Because George E. Kessler, the flower show director, has gone to Europe to be absent several weeks, Convention hall directors have appointed L. A. Goodman director in his place. C. A. Chandler is superintendent of exhibits.

Arnold Ringier, secretary of the W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago, told a local newspaper interviewer that "great interest is being manifested in this show by eastern flower people. They have had bulbs and the like in cold storage ever since last spring," he declared, "just in preparation for this show. The Kansas City show will surpass anything of its kind in this country. Of course, there are other cities where good shows are being held, but in this one the proper interest is shown and everything is done to make it a success.

"Incidentally it is timely to remark that there never was such a demand for flowers and shrubs of a high quality as right now and right in this country. Of course, for older gardens America may not be able to compare with those of Europe—I mean private enterprises. The country here is relatively young and it takes many years to develop these things. But in a general way this country is ahead of any other as a flower country. Of all the cities there is none which, according to its population, buys as much flower goods and of as high a quality as does Kansas City."

MADISON, N. J.

The Society Meetings Begin.

After the usual summer vacation, the regular meetings of the Morris County Gardeners' and Florists' Society were resumed September 13. Attendance was good. Two new members, John C. Elliott and Ambrose H. Secker, were elected. The monthly show of flowers and vegetables was up to the standard. R. Vince, gardener to R. D. Foote, showed a batch of very fine cockscombs in pots, also a vase of an early white chrysanthemum, fine for so early, securing a cultural certificate. A. Herrington brought in Nicotiana Sandera in pots which was awarded a cultural certificate. John Fraser, gardener to Gustave E. Kissell, put up some crotons of fine coloring, which won him a cultural certificate. E. Reagan had five vases of cactus dahlias, which brought him the same award. J. Heremans, gardener to A. R. Whitney, staged a few dishes of Ailsa Craig onion of great size and fine finish which secured a cultural certificate. The judges were C. H. Totty, Wm. Duckham and Wm. Mülmichel. Making final arrangements for the flower show and other incidentals took up much time.

I may say that the great attraction of the evening was the beautiful silver cup on exhibition. It was presented to the society by Farquhar & Co., of Boston, to be awarded for two best vases of carnations, one white and one any one color. To win the cup the same person must take it two years in succession, the vases to contain twenty-five flowers each. There will be much fun, as many eyes are on it.

Mr. Herrington was called on to tell us of the Washington convention. It was a treat to those who were not there. The speaker so ably acquitted himself that he received a rising vote of thanks. Robt. H. Schultz responded to a call for the "inner man" side of the convention. He was fully equal to the occasion. He landed us away down in Baltimore, where in trying to describe the hospitality of the Baltimore boys, his feelings almost overcame him. After a vote of thanks to the speaker, the meeting adjourned.

E. R.

ROCK ISLAND, ILL.

The Tri-City Florists' Association held a rousing meeting September 14, at the home of Ludwig Stapp, and the attendance was the largest that has been seen at any of the meetings for several months. The reports of John Temple and John Staack, who attended the S. A. F. convention at Washington, were received with a great deal of interest, and the delegates gave in addition an account of their visit to all of the largest florist establishments in the east.

Theo. Ewoldt and John Temple, the delegates to the state horticultural meeting at Des Moines, also gave an interesting account of their stay in the capital city. Henry Gaethje, who has just returned from Germany, entertained the association with an account of his trip. One new member was received and other business attended to. The next meeting of the association will be held at the home of Wm. Knees, in Moline.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

THE peony dealers report larger sales than ever this season.

O. P. NICHOLS established a nursery business at Davenport, Ia., in 1858 and since 1865 the business has been conducted by Nichols & Lorton.

W. E. CHAPIN, manager of the Midland Nursery Co., Des Moines, Ia., died September 15 after an operation for goiter. He was 63 years of age.

J. W. TETRICK & Son, Blackwell, Okla., report that stock has made an exceptional growth this season and prospects for business are very bright.

JAMES B. HUTCHISON has sold his nursery at Litchfield, Ill., to Wm. Price, of Greenville, who will dispose of the stock and follow market gardening.

NURSERYMEN in southern Indiana report a very good growing season, with good crops among the farmers and every prospect for a record-breaking fall and spring.

PENDING a test of the new law in Indiana providing penalties for delivering fruit trees not true to name, many nurserymen are inclined to go slow in that state, for accidents will happen in the best regulated of families.

THE American Pomological Society is holding its twenty-ninth biennial meeting this week at Kansas City. The attendance is thought to have suffered somewhat by reason of postponement from the date first announced.

CHARLES WATERS, of White Salmon, Wash., claims that the "seedless" apple now known as Spencer's originated in Virginia and that he had stock of it before the Civil War, selling part to Spencer in 1890. Mr. Waters says the fruit is valueless.

WITH many of the wholesale growers of nursery stock the fall season is now almost as heavy as in spring, due to the fact that all stock now goes into storage houses and many buyers who sell again prefer to have the stock in their own houses during winter.

INDIANAPOLIS.

Indiana State Fair.

The Indiana State Fair was held here September 11 to 15. The usual premiums were offered for plants and cut flowers, which brought some very good exhibits, especially in the floral design classes. The plant exhibits were hardly up to the standard and Judge Bock withheld one or two premiums. The plant prizes were pretty well divided between Baur & Smith, E. A. Nelson and Wm. Billingsley. The first day John Rieman took first on two floral designs, Nelson taking second and Wm. Billingsley third. On two baskets, J. Rieman was first and Nelson second. On cut dahlias Rieman was first and W. W. Coles, of Kokomo, second. On cut roses W. W. Coles took first for the thirteenth time, and Rieman second. On collection of cut flowers W. W. Coles was first and Nelson second.

On Thursday, in the class for original floral arrangement, J. Rieman put up the finest piece of work ever shown at the Indiana State Fair. It was a parlor lamp six feet high. Not only was the piece very appropriate but the colors used and the finish of the work could not have been improved upon. Wm. Billingsley ran a close second, with a reproduction of a painting of a basket of roses. At any previous fair this would have won out. E. A. Nelson's gondola was a pretty piece and elicited much praise.

On this day for two bouquets, Rieman was first, Nelson second and Coles third. On cut gladioli Rieman was first, Coles second and Nelson third.

There was the usual amount of amateur stuff but nothing out of the ordinary. Many out-of-town florists were in the city during the week, among whom was E. G. Hill, of Richmond.

The Fall Flower Show.

The managing committee of florists, consisting of J. Hartje, Mrs. Vesey, F. Dorner, Jr., E. G. Hill, A. F. J. Baur, H. Young, H. W. Rieman and J. A. E. Haugh, held a meeting one day last week and rearranged the premium list for the fall show. Several hundred dollars was added to the total and, instead of adding to the number of classes, it was considered advisable to make the premiums larger, especially on a few special classes in which the public always takes much interest. The rose premiums were raised all around but the Beauty premiums were made especially attractive. For 100 Beauties five premiums are offered, $100, $75, $50, $35 and $25. The carnation premiums were also raised so as to make them more attractive. The final list will be out about the last of October and can be had on application to I. Bertermann, who is secretary. The general support for the show seems excellent and this is expected to be the best show ever given here. The management is doing all in its power to boom it to the public. Intending exhibitors are already inquiring about the list, space, etc. Among them are W. K. Partridge, of Lockland, O., and Nathan Smith & Son, of Adrian, Mich., both of whom have been among the successful exhibitors at our shows for years. They will have plenty of competition, however, from our own boys, if present appearance of stock is any indication. There are not a great many large specimen plants being grown around here, but what there are are in fine shape. Of the market plant sizes there will be a fine show. A. B.

Spawning the Beds.

After the bed is made up it will probably rise to from 105 to 110 degrees, but before the spawn is inserted it should be allowed to drop to 90 degrees, or a little below. If spawned too warm it will result in what is known as burning the spawn, which will not only injure but often entirely destroy the crop.

The spawn should be broken up into pieces one and one-half to two inches square. These pieces should be inserted in the bed deep enough so that the upper surface of the spawn will be about two inches below the level of the surface of the bed. The holes over the spawn should be filled in with the material composing the bed and made quite firm. The temperature of the bed should be allowed to decline at least 10 degrees after the spawn is inserted before the covering of soil is put on. This covering should be packed moderately firm and, being of a closer nature than the manure, naturally acts as a conservator of heat and usually causes the temperature of the bed to rise a few degrees. This, however, will only be temporary and in the course of a few days the temperature of the bed will again be on the decline. It is often hard to procure soil free from the germs of fungus. The best material that can be had is a good, friable loam from an old pasture. As fibre is unnecessary the best way to get the soil is to first take off the sod from the surface and take the soil immediately below. The depth to which it can be taken will depend on the depth of good soil to be had. Some soils run shallow, so that only a few inches of good soil can be had under the soil, while in some cases it could be taken if desired to a depth of a foot or more. The only safe rule is to take only the good loam and avoid getting down into the subsoil.

Providing that it is not after a wet spell, the soil as taken from the pasture lot will be in about the right condition of moisture to apply to the bed, but it is better to have it in the mushroom house, or some place where a temperature of about 60 degrees is maintained, for a few days previous to applying to the bed, so that it will not be too cold.

When the temperature of the bed has dropped to about 75 degrees, a light covering of hay should be put over it. This covering helps to conserve both heat and moisture and protects the bed against fluctuations, if such should occur, in the temperature of the house. This covering can be safely left on until the mushrooms begin to appear, which should be in about six weeks from time of spawning. The time of their coming up varies, but after six weeks it is well to keep a lookout for them and remove the covering before they begin to work up into it. W. S. CROYDON.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Business was very dull the past week. Good asters are quite scarce and, with the heavy rain on Sunday, it is likely they will soon be a thing of the past. Good carnations are to be seen in greater quantities, although still short in stem. Brides and Maids are still very poor. "Green" is plentiful, except smilax.

Various Notes.

The public school gardens were judged September 15 by committees of florists. This work was begun two years ago and for the present season packages of seeds were distributed among 10,000 school children. To increase their interest the Detroit Florists' Club offered two first and two second prizes of $10 and $5 each for the best exhibits of flowers in the various schools. Messrs. Bernard Sullivan, L. Bemb and G. H. Taepke judged at nine of the schools and Philip Breitmeyer, J. F. Sullivan and William Dilger at nine others.

B. Schroeter was the principal exhibitor at the state fair and captured nearly all the first premiums, fourteen altogether. Thos. Gowanlock had a better collection of coleus. Andrew Ferguson had the best fern and Mr. Gowanlock was second. Wm. Brown was second on design and Mr. Ferguson third.

George Johnston, a mason employed on the Breitmeyer building, fell from the fifth floor to the basement, being instantly killed. This is the first accident since work was begun.

Harry Smith is rapidly recovering from his sprained ankle.

Painters and decorators have been busy in Taepke's store, producing a very pretty effect in green and white.

Business at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange was so rushing on Sunday that Manager Dilger had to be called out of church. Calling him from church wasn't so bad if he hadn't been just taking a nap.

Steinke & Son, at Woodmere, are building two houses 26x80.

There are some beautiful specimens of Hydrangea paniculata in bloom at Woodmere cemetery.

MUNCIE, IND.

Simon Humfeld, proprietor of the Muncie Floral Co., has just completed his new additions, consisting of a 125-foot propagating house and connecting house, to his new heating plant, of which he is very proud, having put in two fifty horse-power boilers of the Atlas type. His large smokestack is adequate for the expectation of a much larger addition anticipated for next season. The new houses this year make fourteen in all, giving a total of about 30,000 feet of glass, all of which are modern style. W. M. Bailey, his foreman, is from the east and is a very successful grower and propagator. Owing to the increasing demand for good stock he finds it necessary to get up a good hustle.

BALTIMORE.

Business with the beginning of September showed slight improvement, the demand being fairly brisk all last week. The weather is cool and it has already shown its effects on the Cochet roses, which a week or two ago were coming in by the thousands. All at once they have dropped to very small amounts and are much in demand now, as indoor roses are not yet very plentiful. Carnations have improved in quality and supply during the past week and are selling well. Dahlias are not so plentiful as in former years. California violets have already made their appearance but are not yet of good quality.

Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Burger are back from their three weeks' vacation.

Mrs. Shuler, for many years of 322 West Saratoga street, has removed to her handsome new store just three doors below, with one of the finest store fronts in the city. A. F.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Good stock of all kinds continues to be in very short supply. Carnations are more plentiful than roses, but they are short-stemmed and will not be up to the standard for several weeks. Asters are much less plentiful and the price has advanced about fifty per cent. Chrysanthemums are not quite ready. A few hot-house yellows and whites are shown, but the outside stock will still be scarce for a couple of weeks. Lilium album and rubrum are nearing the end of their season. Business is quiet, although I think it is a trifle better, on the average, than that of a year ago.

Various Notes.

W. H. Skimming, of Haywards, has on exhibition at the Oakland Board of Trade a specimen of the Russian sunflower weighing twenty pounds and measuring eighteen inches across.

H. M. Sanborn, of Oakland, is in Portland on a two weeks' vacation.

Eugene Buergle, gardener to F. Tillman, of Fruitvale, has in bloom one of the finest collections of dahlias in the county.

The town of Palo Alto is to employ a landscape architect and make numerous improvements, as well as plant largely of trees and shrubbery on the public thoroughfares this season.

The California State Floral Society had its annual dahlia show at Elks' hall on Friday of last week. A very fine assortment of blooms was exhibited, consisting of the best of the old with a number of the newer sorts. The cactus dahlias attracted most of the attention. The committee of arrangements was composed of Mrs. O. D. Wheeler, Mrs. J. Branin, John Hinkle and John Valance.

The Society of Hortensia, originally composed of gardeners and florists of German nationality, has appointed a committee to rearrange the by-laws so that the meetings will hereafter be conducted in the English language.

J. Monson, a gardener employed in the grounds of the University of California, at Berkeley, has lost his eyesight as the result of the splashing of a mixture of Paris green and whale oil soap that was being used on the oak trees to destroy the caterpillars and which accidentally struck his face.

Wm. Rheinhold, the Petaluma nurseryman, is in town on a short visit. G.

ANOTHER NURSERY PEST.

John Isaac, after acting as representative for California in a conference with the horticultural authorities of Mexico, has just reported that six and perhaps more states in Mexico are harboring a foe of oranges and other nursery stock which this coast has reason to dread. Mr. Isaac was sent to the southern republic because it protested against the exclusion of Mexican fruits and plants from California. He made the trip under instructions from Horticultural Commissioner Elwood Cooper. He reports that he found that thousands of citrus fruits, mangoes, etc., have been destroyed within the past three months by the Mexicans in an attempt to eradicate the orange maggot, which has occasioned most of the damage.

The orange maggot proceeds from the eggs of the insect known as the thrypeta ludens. The fecundity of this insect is something astonishing. A written statement made by Prof. Herrera, of Mexico, is quoted by Mr. Isaac in his report that the descendants of 3,000 larvae at the fourth generation, or within one year, number 4,500,000 in round figures. Evidently the Mexicans do not object to sending this blight abroad, as Prof. Herrera further states that one great circumstance which prevents the plague from spreading very fast in Mexico is the fact that the greater part of the wormy fruit is exported to distant places, but he also adds that if for any reason the exportation of fruit was suspended the country would soon be overrun with these miserable insects.

Mr. Isaac reports that from the investigation made, from the best information obtainable, it appears that the pest exists in the states of Guerrero, Morelos, Oaxaca, Tabasco and Vera Cruz and quite probably also in Campeachy, Tlaxcala and Yucatan. The other Mexican states are thus far apparently free from the pest. The infested section that California would fear is the state of Guerrero and its port of Acapulco. It is one of the principal shipping points in Mexico and there is continuous intercommunication between it and California points. G.

DENVER.

The Market.

Business conditions remain about the same as last week, trade continuing fairly good for September. Stock is in good shape. Brides and Maids have increased offerings and are fine in bud and stems. Chateaus are also good, quite a few selects being cut, while Liberty is not far behind. Some of the new Richmond are seen, as well as Rosalind Orr English, being fine in color and with quite good stems. Some of the new crop of carnations are now coming into the market, but as yet are not very long in stem, but are improving every day, the white, perhaps, being the best.

Asters are very much in evidence in all colors. White and purple sell well, while pink go slowly. The top price is $3 per hundred and down as low as 50 cents for common. Dahlias are now to be had in quantity in all shades of color and appear to be fine, the weather having been favorable.

Various Notes.

W. W. Wilmore, the dahlia specialist, was a large prize-winner at a recent show of the El Paso County Horticultural Society. For general collection of dahlia plants, he took first prize, a silver cup; first prize for general collection of named varieties, cut flowers; first for ten named varieties, show or fancy dahlias; second for named varieties of cactus dahlias and collection of singles; first for display of named novelties not disseminated before 1904; second for five named pompon dahlias; first for six varieties and for five blooms Twentieth Century. Mr. Wilmore also won first prize for general collection of gladioli and for twelve spikes red and for twelve spikes blue or lavender.

Wm. F. Gude, of Washington, D. C., was a caller a week ago, it being his first visit to this section of the country. He expressed himself as greatly pleased with Colorado. His party was in a railroad accident. The car containing the party en route to Salida, Colo., collided with a freight train on Labor day, killing four. Two were brought to the hospital here and six returned to their homes.

At the Colorado State Fair, held at Pueblo, Colo., September 11 to 15, an interesting branch was the floricultural department. In the various collections of plants the Park Floral Co., of Denver, won first premium in every case, with one exception. In cut flowers and floral designs they also carried away first premiums with the exception of a table and mantel decoration, which were second. The displays in this department at the fair were far ahead of any previous year.

Emil Glauber is cutting some very fine asters just now, some measuring four and five inches. E. S. K.

LINCOLN, NEB.

This year's state fair was the best yet. The attendance was far ahead of last year. The exhibit of the florists in horticultural hall was chiefly made up of palms, ferns and foliage plants. All the old varieties and some new ones were there to create covetous desires for the average woman. Besides a choice display of decorative plants, L. Henderson, of Omaha, showed a gay row of Japan lilies and plenty of begonias, roses and

AURORA, ILL.

James W. Davis, of Morrison, Ill., Walter B. Davis, of Geneva, and other parties have formed a company to erect and operate large greenhouses in Aurora. They have purchased a city block of land from W. E. Gillette in the Aurora Co-op-erage addition and have commenced the erection of large greenhouses which will cover nearly the whole property. F. O. Johnson, of Morrison, who has had considerable experience in this class of building, has charge of the construction of the new houses, which will cost in the neighborhood of $15,000. The work will be pushed as rapidly as possible, and it is the intention to have it completed sufficiently to raise a crop during the coming winter.

The establishment will be operated on similar lines to the establishments in Morrison which have proved so successful. Cucumbers will be the first crop put in, but later on the propagation of flowers and possibly other varieties of vegetables may be taken up.

The promoters believe that Aurora offers a splendid field for the industry. It is but an hour's ride from Chicago, has several railroads so that the shipping facilities are good, and coal is cheap.

James W. Davis will remain in Morrison, his brother Walter assuming the management of the new establishment.

FREDERICK, MD.—Edward Sharp has secured a judgment for $500 against the city. He had a contract with the city for water; the supply failed and he lost much stock. He sued the city for $5,000.

GLEN CLOVE, N. Y.

Society Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Nassau County Horticultural Society was held at the Glen Cove Greenhouses on September 6. The attendance was large; in fact, the largest yet. The membership roll steadily increases. At the last meeting one new member was elected and three proposed. President Harrison occupied the chair. Preparations for the coming November flower show were pushed forward.

Mr. Rickard's prize was awarded to Jas. Halloway, gardener to the Pratt estate, for gladioli. The same gentleman has generously given a prize for the October meeting for the twelve best carnations arranged for effect, while his brother has promised a prize for the best vase of dahlias arranged for effect.

The exhibits were large and varied, their histories being listened to with much interest. Mr. Halloway's collection of apples, peaches and plums looked exceedingly tempting on the table; afterwards they proved very appetizing. The same gentleman showed a branch of Chionanthus Virginica in fruit, a thing not seen every day.

Chas. Lenker had a beautiful assortment of choice outdoor-grown roses, dahlias, hydrangeas and hardy perennial phlox, while Mr. Mense, of Glen Cove, exhibited five tea roses and a vase of delphiniums. John F. Johnston brought cactus dahlias and a collection of seed cones of pines, firs and spruces.

ABUNDANCE

The Phenomenal Yields

A carnation that stands alone for blooming, as a glance at the above photo will show. No other sort can compare with it. Blooming profusely from fall until thrown out in summer. Color, pure white, a good size, well built flower of the shape of Scott. Stems in fall 14 to 16 inches, stretching to 2, 2 1/2 and 3 feet in winter and spring, very stiff without being rigid. Is a fine keeper and shipper. flowers sent to Cuba last year kept in perfect condition a week after arrival. Plant has the slim, wiry growth of McGowan in fall but loses this character as winter and spring advance. as it makes a rapid, strong and vigorous growth. It makes a large bunch of fibrous roots, which accounts for its wonderful recuperative power, and makes it extremely easy to handle; it can be transplanted with perfect safety, plants standing up like soldiers in a couple of days after planting. It makes absolutely no grass at base of plants for every shoot runs quickly up to flower. A thoroughly business Carnation. Is a profuse propagator and a sure and easy rooter. Has never been subject to any disease. There is nothing in the way of a Carnation easier to grow, but beware of overfeeding, as it won't stand it; flowers will burst if fed highly; 3 parts of well-rotted sod or rich loam, with 1 part well-rotted manure is all it requires, no other dressing. This is a Carnation that returns dollars for cents to the grower, for while he grows Abundance he will always get an abundance.

Orders taken now for cuttings, so send in your order early as they are filled in strict rotation.

Price for well-rooted Cuttings, $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000; 500 at 1000 rate. To those wishing unrooted cuttings will be given 25 extra with each 100. Rooted cuttings as soon as possible; unrooted cuttings after Nov. 1. Cash before delivery

CLEVELAND.

The Market.

September is usually the month for the home-coming of flower buyers and it is hoped the prophecies of a busy season will be fulfilled. Up to date there has been nothing of great importance going on, but the market is assuming a more healthy condition. October's outlook is very bright for weddings, judging from orders now on hand. Tea roses are becoming more plentiful, with the usual low prices for early fall. Beauties are not plentiful and command fair prices. Indoor carnations can be had in almost any quantity, with from $1 to $2 for choice. Asters and dahlias predominate and are sold at prices satisfactory to the grower.

Various Notes.

At a meeting of the Florists' Club September 11, officers for the ensuing year were nominated. The election will take place September 25. It is earnestly requested that all members attend, as there will be something doing on this occasion.

A ride through the system of parks is very enjoyable, to see the large beds of cannas, geraniums, begonias and coleus, all having the best possible care and attention. The cannas particularly are a grand sight. Their brilliant array of color and massive foliage are very striking. The beds in the public square are at their prime. Carpet bedding, ancient as it may seem, has a very pleasing and decorative effect when used properly. The various designs and badges of the G. A. R. and the D. A. R. are effectively laid out and true to color scheme. Alternantheras, santolinas, alyssums, lobelias, echeverias and sedums are used. Credit is due the gardener who executed these designs.

Lakeview cemetery is a most beautiful spot to visit at this season of the year. Trees, shrubs and flower beds present a pretty aspect. Beds of hardy hydrangeas are simply immense; flower heads, enormous in size, with the dark green surroundings, are a pleasure to look upon. A bed of Vernon begonia is one mass of flowers and shows what a fine thing it is when used properly.

Order now while the weather permits shipping. Notice—When you undertake anything, do it well or not at all. This is our motto adopted 10 years ago when we imported the first lot of this well known pot plant, the ARAUCARIA EXCELSA from Belgium.

These everlasting green foliaged pot plants are growing more in favor by the tasteful plant buyers of this land from year to year. Please watch the growth of our importation during the last 10 years: first year 100, second 250, third 500, fourth 1000, fifth 2,000. This year (1905) which is the 10th anniversary of our first importation, our spring importation amounted to 5,000. All these are grown for us under contract by an Araucaria specialist in Belgium. I must say for the benefit of my customers that they were never before so nice and large for the money as this year. I herewith quote you special prices on these, in or out of:

Each

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

One finds a more cheerful condition in looking over the trade the past week. There is a general improvement all along the line and the retailers say that they look for an exceptionally good season, as they already have orders booked up into November. Good stock of all kinds finds ready sale. Lilies are very scarce. Carnations are beginning to come in from the young plants, and find good sale. Asters still hold their own and will do so until we get a frost.

Various Notes.

Mrs. Schmucker, of Liberty avenue, is building a small house in the rear of her store, which adds a great deal to the appearance of her place.

Thursday, September 14, was the date of the first light frost in this section, but it did no damage.

John H. Tasker, manager of the Walton Co., of Rice's Landing, was a visitor this week. They grow plants and vegetables and also do cut flower work.

Last week was L. I. Neff's bad week. His drivers managed to put three wagons out of business by turning them upside-down and otherwise; loss about $75.

The fairs attracted some of the boys last Thursday. T. P. Langhans, George and Edward Blind took in the one at Wheeling, W. Va.

Carriek mentions Wm. Lauch as having moved his establishment to Rochester, N. Y. It should have been New Galilee, Pa.

J. J. Fuchs is completing a conservatory in the rear of his Carson street store.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is making a fine show of Beauties and Kaisers.

One cannot understand why the aster growers continue from year to year growing that dirty magenta pink aster so much in evidence just now, as it is only salable when no other pink can be had.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Lustick, of Washington, Pa., and Miss Margaret Schneider, of Johnstown, Pa., were visitors last week.

Howard Carney, of J. B. Murdoch & Co., reports fall trade starting in nicely.

The Florists' Exchange is making preparations for a busy winter.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

At the last meeting of the Chicago Florists' Club the following resolutions were adopted and a copy engrossed by J. P. Risch signed by the officers of the club:

Whereas, Almighty God, in the exercise of His divine will, has removed from this world and the busy walks of life John C. Ure;

Therefore, we, the members of the Chicago Florists' Club, have assembled here tonight, to pay our last sad tributes to the memory of the departed, and to express our deep appreciation of the many and lasting obligations that we, as fellow-craftsmen, owe him, and by words and outward tokens to express our sincere sorrow for the irreparable loss our club has sustained by his death.

Resolved, That it is but a just tribute to the memory of the departed to say that, in regretting his removal from our midst, we mourn for one who was in every way an able florist and horticulturist. His love for flowers won for him the admiration of all, and his landscaping done about the Illinois state building at the World's Columbian Exposition was highly commended by everyone. No man ever did or could do more for the advancement of horticulture, and we sincerely deplore his loss, and express our heartfelt sympathy with his sorrowing family.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the records of the club and an engrossed copy thereof be transmitted to the family of our deceased brother and to each of the trade journals.

OMAHA.

Trade is a trifle quiet at present, with stock fair in quality. Fall work is being carried on with vigor, and as an early winter is expected this is naturally taking the bull by the horns.

The Florists' Club held the annual election Thursday, September 14, with the following result: President, J. J. Hess; vice-president, S. R. Falconer; treasurer, Geo. H. Swoboda; secretary, L. Henderson; trustees, Wm. Falconer, Wm. Ellsworth, and J. H. Bath. A resolution was passed changing the name from the Nebraska Florists' Club to the Omaha Florists' Club. This met with hearty approval.

Warren Arnold is in Denver permanently.

Herbert Slocombe's barn, in which were stored a number of hot-bed sash, was struck by lightning and damaged to the extent of $200; insured.

L. Baumann, of Chicago, was in Omaha last week. He says things are fine.

Miss Margaret Truelson, of Hess & Swoboda's, has resigned. Matrimony is hinted, but perhaps we are mistaken.

L. Henderson was king pin at the state fair, capturing most of the prizes.
J. H. B.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—At the Minnesota state fair A. S. Swanson was awarded first premiums for specimen palms, specimen fern, for display of cut flowers and for table decoration.

CHATHAM, N. J.—A rural free delivery service has been established from this post office which gives better mail facilities to many florists, among whom is W. H. Parsil, who formerly received his mail at Summit.

HEATING PROBLEMS.

I have a steam boiler which you last year figured could heat 2,500 square feet of radiation. You stated that a 4-inch riser would be required. I have Bailey's Horticultural Rule Book, to which, if I remember right, you have alluded. I note that its tables (page 156) give the capacity of a 4-inch main as 1,600 square feet. Is this table not correct?

This year I wish to heat ten runs of 1-inch pipe 168 feet long in each of two houses; also a riser for each house. How large will these two risers have to be? Then I wish to heat 125 lineal feet of 1-inch pipe in an end house with no riser. The riser from the boiler to these houses is about forty feet long. I figure from Prof. Bailey's tables that the total radiation would be about 1,470 square feet. Is this correct? How large a riser at the boiler will be required?

Concerning valves in returns, do check valves work satisfactorily instead of other valves at the lower end of a coil of returns? If so, which would you use, horizontal or upright? Are they used extensively for this purpose. J. M. K.

Yes, the table in Bailey's Rule Book is all right. The capacities of the pipes stated on page 156 are, however, more nearly correct for hot water than for steam. A 4-inch riser, if not too long, will carry 3,000 feet of radiation when used for steam.

I think it would be advisable to use a 2½-inch riser in each of the houses 168 feet long. Each house piped in this way would carry about 600 feet of radiation. The total radiation in the pipes specified would be about 1,200 square feet. Each lineal foot of 1-inch pipe is equal to .344 square feet of radiation. A 3½-inch riser from the boiler will be ample for the entire addition you propose.

In regard to the use of check valves I will say that I have used them extensively but do not think they are in general use by florists. They are a good thing but cannot be depended upon to take the place of gate or globe valves. On returns they are of the utmost importance and should be universally used. The swing check is the only safe and reliable form to use. L. C. C.

MISCELLANEOUS SEASONABLE HINTS.

The Dutch Bulbs.

The florist's leisure time is over and many are the important jobs that now need your attention. The Holland bulbs have arrived. This means the tulips, narcissi and hyacinths. You will not likely have the time to box all the bulbs you force as soon as received, nor is it at all necessary. Unlike the loose-scaled lily bulbs, these tulips, etc., take no harm from being kept out of the ground for a month or more, providing you keep them in a perfectly dry, cool shed or room.

Early Flowering.

There is no longer a craze to have tulips and narcissi at Christmas. We have Romans and Paper Whites and the French narcissi for that time and, with the exception, perhaps, of La Reine tulip, it is well along in January before there is a paying demand. Yet to have good tulips even the latter part of January it is necessary to box some bulbs at your very earliest opportunity. They must be rooted or they will not force. Your trade may require a few dozen boxes, or a few hundred of each good variety.

Soil for Boxing.

I have for years maintained that "any old soil" was good enough for these bulbs. I still think the mechanical condition of the soil is more important than the quality, but from observation last spring I am going to modify the statement about "any old soil." Soil from a carnation or rose bench that was emptied out last June and has had one or two turnings would be just the thing, but if you have nothing but a light sand, then add a fourth of sifted rotten manure.

We know the thrifty Hollander covers his land with cow manure to a depth and weight in excess of anything we practice here. Potatoes are grown the first year but are not eaten in Holland. Oh! No. They are sent to England and Germany. The next year hyacinths are grown and the next tulips, and then the manure comes again. So what must their fields be in a dozen years? This shows their bulbs will stand a very highly manured soil. The Hollander produces by intense cultivation the splendid bulbs and embryo flower. We only force it into bloom, but yet a good, rich soil will add to the size and quality of your tulips, hyacinths and narcissi.

Use Uniform Flats.

I can only repeat that it is poor economy to use every size and shape of box or flat for forcing bulbs. Let them be of some uniform size and depth. We find a flat that is twenty-four inches long, twelve inches broad and three inches deep the most convenient size. They fit on a bench without loss of space and do not break the back of the man who carries them in and out of the houses.

After filling the flat quite lightly with the compost you can squeeze the bulbs into the soil until the top of the bulb is about even with the top of the flat. A little soil thrown in to fill up between the bulbs and the job is done. Now this is a job at which a man with a helper, to fill and take away his flats, can put in many thousands of bulbs in a day. There are many light operations in our business such as this. Making cuttings, moving over plants on a bench and potting small plants must be done rapidly or there is no profit and I am going to say that if a man or youth does not delight to have things pass quickly through his hands he is no good for the business.

Put the flats outdoors on the ground in beds of convenient length and breadth and, after a good soaking, cover them with three inches of soil.

Planting Tulip Beds.

Let me remind you who plant tulip beds for your customers, and many of us use up thousands of our importations in that way, that it is a long month yet before these bulbs should be planted in the beds. From personal experience, and the opinion of some very able men, it is proved that the later (within reason) these bulbs are planted in the fall the longer and finer will be your display next May. I have gone into the reason for this at some length other years, so will say no more now.

Indian Azaleas.

Another very important plant will soon arrive, the Azalea Indica. The quantity now imported is enormous and they are so easily handled and brought into flower that every florist, large or small, who has a greenhouse, handles his hundred or thousand of these showy plants. With us they usually arrive in most excellent condition, green as they grew in the manure-saturated beds of Belgium. Most of them are so heavily rooted that it is necessary to trim the roots so that they will go into a size of pot suitable for the size of the plant. If the ball, or mass of roots, is cut down with a big, sharp knife, I never saw the least harm come of it.

The most important thing of all, which only beginners can be unaware of, is that after you have trimmed the roots to the desired dimensions to stand them in a tub of water for a minute or so, or till the soil and roots are soaked through. Then in a few minutes you can pot them, using a flat, blunt stick to ram down the new soil.

Simple as all this is, it is most important and years ago by its neglect many an importer was blamed for that of which he was entirely guiltless. Stand your newly imported azaleas in a cool, shady house and keep rather close for a week. Spray lightly two or three times daily. They are slow to make new roots, but quickly become established in their new environments. WILLIAM SCOTT.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

New Varieties.

Some of the recently introduced varieties will probably be among your assortment, and it is but natural that there should be anticipation of marked improvement over older sorts, but we must not expect too much on short acquaintance.

Every variety has its peculiarities, such as capacity for food, capability of re-establishment after housing, susceptibility to disease and a disposition to favor a certain time to be propagated. Knowing the most suitable temperature, whether a light or heavy feeder, rapid or slow grower, and such other information as can be learned about a variety, we have something to serve as a partial guide; but one needs to summer and winter with a variety to really learn its likes and dislikes.

Some of our most popular and now largely grown sorts received but feeble praise at the beginning of their careers. Many of us recall the complaints regarding Lawson the first year it was grown by the trade, how it burst and gave only short stems until some time after the holidays. It was nearly two years before its proper night temperature was widely known; then the problem was to produce good length of stem by Christmas.

I have always claimed that no variety can be expected to show its real meritorious qualities until the plants are produced wholly by the grower; that is, cuttings taken from plants under his care, the same being rooted and handled through the various stages of cultivation at the grower's establishment. This claim is made on personal experience, observation and knowledge of methods in disseminating new varieties, but is not in any sense a reflection on our worthy introducers.

Of course there are exceptions, but the majority of new sorts may be considered as doing well if the first season their original cost and expense in handling is returned. The gain on the investment can be looked for in the form of a thrifty lot of young stock to plant out the following spring.

It would be best not to attempt the production of many top-notchers from the new ones this year, but let them come along naturally, giving every care due them, meanwhile making a study of their peculiarities. A more general pursuance of this plan would result in better appreciation of the hybridizers' efforts, better goods for the flower-buying public and more money to the grower.

Committees on Seedlings.

President Duckham has announced the committees to examine seedlings and sports on dates as follows: October 7, 14, 21 and 28; November 4, 11, 18 and 25, 1905.

Exhibits to receive attention from the committees must in all cases be prepaid to destination, and the entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week preceeding examination, or may accompany the blooms. Special attention is called to the rule requiring that sports to receive a certificate must pass three committees.

VIOLETS IN THE SOUTH.

The following may be of interest to H. S. P., in his selection of violets for Florida: If H. S. P. will give what we here term the Russian violet a trial I feel almost certain of his success.

and will produce twice as many flowers as the aforesaid variety. Divide the plants in August, selecting only runners or young divisions with a few fine white fibrous roots. Plant in full sun but give plenty of water. In October or the first part of November we give them a mulch of well rotted cow manure, and with sash protection we have an abundance of good flowers from November to April. If the temperature does not go below 28 degrees, they will keep on blooming without protection, but a little protection assures larger flowers and longer stems. Princess of Wales also does fairly well here, but the doubles we have as yet not been able to do satisfactorily. Lady Hume Campbell seems to be the best.
H. P. LODINO.

IN A LEAN-TO.

Please tell us whether violets for winter blooming would do better to have the runners cut off. We have a house with hotbed sash slanting to the south, next to the main house, 6x80 feet. The violets are planted in permanent beds, one 2-inch pipe running the entire length and one 1½-inch pipe direct from the hot water boiler and returning through the coil in the main building. Do you think violets will do well there?

A. J. S.

In reply to this query I would say that the runners should be cut off by all means, and not only should they now be so treated, but the runners should have been so treated all summer, which I take by the tenor of your letter you have not done. If so, you will undoubtedly find many plants with a very small crown and several short runner crowns, in which case you will have to use good judgment and retain some of these for flowering.

As to your second question, I should think that you could be successful with the house, or frame, that you describe. As I do not know how low your temperatures go, however, I cannot say if you have piping enough and then it depends some on how you can get at them to pick them, from the house or by lifting the sash outdoors. If you will look up your back numbers of the REVIEW I described last spring a similar house that I had at one time.

NEW CACTUS DAHLIAS.

The accompanying illustrations from photographs show two of the new cactus dahlias now flowering for the first time in America. These are Dainty yellow, and Sweet Nell, pink. Cactus dahlias have made a great advance in popular favor since the beginning of the remarkable improvement which has taken place in this type of flower in the past few years and these are two of the most distinct of the newer sorts and likely to add to the reputation of the introducer, Hobbies, Ltd., Dereham, Norfolk, England, whose seedling cactus dahlias are already known the world over. Hobbies do an immense business in dahlias, propagating in probably larger quantities than any other grower the world over. Each year they have a new set to offer. Dainty and Sweet Nell were included in the 1904 set, distributed quite widely in America, where the flowering is now being watched with interest. Habit of growth has always been a cardinal point with these growers and in this respect, including

This variety we have been growing here in Mobile for a number of years, and find it to stand the hottest weather to perfection. While not in quality equal to Princess of Wales, it is a good, large purple flower, with fair stem and odor, length and stiffness of stem, the 1904 set gives promise of complete satisfaction.

Dainty is true to its name. When Hobbies sent it out they said they thought it their best introduction for many years. It is very distinct in coloring and combines shades in a manner hitherto unknown. The ground color is lemon yellow, more intense, approaching canary yellow at the base of the petals. Half way from the base there is a shading of rose pink. The tips of the petals are golden. The form of the bloom is excellent, the stem long and strong, the height of the plant a little above three feet. This variety was figured in a color plate by one of the English gardening publications last season. It has an award of merit from the Royal Horticultural Society and half a dozen other societies have given it first-class certificates.

Sweet Nell was also given an award of merit by the Royal Horticultural Society and has many certificates to its credit. This variety marks quite a break in color, the ground color being a most intense pink. In their catalogue description of it Hobbies said that it "approaches the delightful coloring in the new American rambler rose, Dorothy Perkins." The center florets are lighted up with paler pink, sometimes by almost white petals. This promises to be a most useful cut flower variety, the color being one which combines well with the green of asparagus and lends itself well to such uses as table centerpieces, baskets, etc. The flower is of good form and the plant of good growth.

A WORD FROM AN EMPLOYEE.

DEAR EDITOR: Would you consider a few words from an humble employee worthy of space in your valuable paper? I am not a literary aspirant, nor do I hope to be, for I have no such talent, but I do not think that I have ever seen an article written by an employee, and surely there must be as many who are reading your paper as there are employers. Is there no one on our side who might say a few words occasionally? Must we keep silent? It does seem that way.

We always read about some great man who has made a grand success in floriculture, but never a word about the men who probably made him a success. Now undoubtedly the employer who may chance to read this will at once say that here is a "chronic kicker," but hold on! There never was a more optimistic fellow than I am, although these words may sound pessimistic.

Some time ago there appeared in the REVIEW an article by one of our distinguished writers, entitled "Is Our Trade Not Attractive?" This writer, being an employer, of course, explains that it is attractive and sure enough it is in one sense of the word. He, however, brings out only two points to substantiate his claims; viz., the love of nature and flowers and the young man's hope of some time being in business for himself.

Now that writer is well aware of the fact that this trade has more disagreeable features, compared with the wages, than almost any other trade, and that is very probably the reason that prompted him to write on that subject with a view of distracting the employee's thoughts from all that is objectionable and thereby score one more point for the employer.

Certainly, anyone who has no liking for flowers has no business to be a florist but that alone will not support a man. The young man who hopes to some time be in business for himself must certainly be very, very frugal unless he is so fortunate as to marry his employer's daughter.

"Well," says some old man, "I started with a few dollars." Yes, so you did some thirty or forty years ago, when competition was not so keen, but, alas, it is different now.

What encouragement does a young man get who spends his best years in a stuffy greenhouse, away, one might say, from all civilization? Some people get paid for working with their hands, others for working with their brains. A florist must work with both, and long hours at that, or get out, and what is his pay? Ask a sewer digger.

I had occasion to talk this matter over with the superintendent of one of our large greenhouse establishments. During the conversation I noticed his little boy. I asked the man if his boy would learn the trade. "No, no," said he, "not if I can help it." Why should a man of his rank speak thus? I know a score of young men who, after spending the best part of their lives in this business, left it because of blasted hopes of ever getting the wages that would enable them to start for themselves.

How often do we see an advertisement for help, like this: "A first-class grower of roses, carnations and bedding stock; don't answer unless you can furnish A1 references as to character and ability; state age and wages wanted."

I know of at least one profession that would pay at least $50 a week if what is required in this advertisement were required. Think how many years you work for $8, $9, possibly $10 a week to learn this trade so that you may now meet these requirements. You must furnish A1 references, too, mind you, and you answer the advertisement. You state that you should have at least $12 a week; yes, that is about right. Some get a little more but the majority get less. You also inclose a stamp for reply, and do you hear from him? Well, if that man feels that he might open his heart $12 worth you may hear from him; otherwise nine times out of ten he will not reply.

Suppose you get the job at $12 a week. Go to the city and you find the hod-carrier is getting it. He may never have carried a hod before today. His work is no harder than wheeling soil under glass in August and he does not work Sundays or nights, and furthermore he has no responsibility.

Ah! Mr. Employer, if you wish to retain the young American as your assistant, your head man, you must offer encouragement, inducements or at once prepare yourself to depend entirely on foreign help. There are far better opportunities for the young American and he is too ambitious to stop for the inducements the employment in this business offers, with all its objectionable features.

Can't afford to pay higher wages! This is no excuse at all. If it is, then where is the encouragement for a young man to start in business for himself? Any business that can't afford to offer better inducements is not worth going into. The mere love of flowers will not hold the young American in the trade or business.

SNAILS.

Will some one come to my rescue and help me by telling what will destroy the snails that are eating the foliage on my ferns? I have fine Adiantum cuneatum which they will ruin. I have tried raw potato about the roots, and several other things, but to no effect. Please suggest a way to kill the little rascals. J. S.

A small quantity of pulverized camphor sprinkled around the adiantums in question will drive the snails away, or some cornmeal mixed with Paris green, and placed in a saucer, or similar shallow vessel, will be likely to dispose of these troublesome visitors.

burg for the addresses of some local growers. I could get the names of only two. I was told that all flowers (violets) come from the Hudson river district. I wrote to these two. One replied that he was not now growing violets. The other replied that he had quit raising violets and for me not to attempt it. I am not entirely discouraged, as the wholesale prices quoted, "demand always good for good flowers" seems to me to promise fair returns for labor (my own), but I am still anxious to get the address of a successful near-by grower whom I could visit before I start to build. I want to be ready to plant a house early next spring.

Is the Japanese fern ball ever known to poison the persons handling them? My hands were severely poisoned recently and I know no other source.

GUTTMAN ON THE VIOLET.

A. J. Guttman, of New York, writes that he has returned from a thorough six-day tour of the violet district on the Hudson, visiting 120 different establishments. He reports exceptionally fine plants and blooms for the time of the year. While he does not believe in early shipments, he feels it only just, where the great majority of the stock is so fine so early in the season, that the growers should profit by their enterprise.

The growers realize that the increase in the amount of glass devoted to violets this year will make competition keen and are likely to be more liberal in their bunching, putting more than the regulation fifty blooms in their bunches and so helping both wholesaler and retailer. Now that so many orchids and gardenias are used for corsage work, this accession to the size will have its effect and help to keep the violet a favorite with the flower-wearing public. Mr. Guttman announces as an evidence of the confidence of his growers an addition of 100 per cent to their number this season. He says the reports of poor and diseased plants are without foundation and he found a cordial welcome from all the growing fraternity.

BLACK SPOT.

This is the season when black spot is most likely to begin its ravages and great care should be taken to avoid those conditions favorable to its germination and growth.

As root action begins to get slow great caution should be used in the supply of water given, as any check to the foliage caused by overwatering is almost certain to be followed by a visit from this pest and especially is this the case if the crop is Beauties.

Care in ventilation is particularly necessary to keep it from getting a start and should be so regulated that no sudden chill may occur and also at the same time prevent as much as possible any condensation from taking place, which can be done by keeping up as much steam as will cause a gentle circulation of the air to keep it sweet.

The foliage also should all be in a dry condition before sundown, as wet foliage over night is one of the most fruitful sources of this trouble.

If spot makes its appearance in the house no time should be lost in going after it. Pick off every affected leaf and burn it and keep up this picking so long as there is one affected leaf in the house.

It is also advisable to use a mixture of sulphur and lime on both leaves and soil, using the sulphur blower for distributing so that every leaf gets its complement. I am not certain that this will kill the parasite, but I am convinced that it in a great measure prevents it from spreading.

This pest can also be kept in subjection by the use of the carbonate of copper compound (cupram), using five ounces of the carbonate of copper to three quarts of ammonia and sixty gallons of water. This mixture should be applied with a nozzle which makes a very fine spray and every part of the leaves, both upper and lower side, should be washed. The spraying should be done once a week and continued until the trouble disappears.

Cleanliness in the house is of the utmost importance and all dead and decaying leaves, and weeds should be scrupulously removed from benches and walks and burned. Watchfulness and energy are two of the essentials absolutely necessary in combating this, the worst of all our fungoid enemies in the Beauty house.

RIBES.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Violet Growing.

I read with interest Dr. Galloway's articles in the REVIEW on violet culture, then got his book and read and have decided to try to grow them. I wrote to the wholesale cut flower people in Pitts-

A New Wholesale Establishment at Detroit, Mich.

Prize Automobile Decoration by O. Sylvester, Oconomowoc, Wis.

A NEW DETROIT HOUSE.

The accompanying illustration shows the store front of the Detroit Cut Flower Supply House, which was opened for business March 10, 1905, by H. V. Pearce, who is seen standing in the doorway, and C. H. Pease, who is the managing partner. They are pleasant gentlemen of long experience in the trade and their judgment that Detroit offered a good field for such a concern as theirs has been fully proven by the results attained in a very few months. They have a number of good growers and are doing a nice local trade and considerable shipping, with good prospects for material increases in both departments.

A DECORATED AUTOMOBILE.

At a recent floral parade at Oconomowoc, Wis., exclusively for automobiles, there were about forty-five entries. Many of the vehicles were decorated at heavy expense by some of the leading decorators brought up from Chicago, but the first prize went to the automobile decorated by Otto Sylvester, of Oconomowoc, shown in the accompanying illustration. The motor wagon was given the form of a sail-boat. Thousands of Shasta daisies and pansies were used and trimmed with asparagus. It was a distinct feature of the parade.

BOILER AND PIPING.

I can buy a return tubular boiler with a dome. It is ten feet long, forty-four inches in diameter and has forty-six 3-inch flues. It is rated at twenty-five horse-power. It has been used for steam and has a 3-inch opening. Will such a boiler be all right for hot water? Will it need larger openings than 3-inch? How low should the dome be below the level of the greenhouse floor?

My two houses are 18x75, eleven feet to the ridge and five and one-half feet to the gutters; glass in east gable. I have 300 feet of 4-inch boiler flues for one house; the balance will be 1½-inch pipe. One house is for mixed stock, the other for carnations. How much piping will I require in Kansas climate and how shall I arrange it? I have a 45-gallon expansion tank to put above the boiler.

Could I use crude oil for fuel, at $1.25 per barrel, at a saving over coal at $5 per ton? C. J. L.

If the boiler in question is a good one it will be satisfactory for a hot-water heater. This type of boiler is the most economical of fuel of any form you could employ for hot-water heating. If it can be so arranged that the top of the dome is two feet or more below the level of the floor of the greenhouses, the more easily the heating system in the houses can be arranged. The 3-inch opening in the dome will probably be sufficient. A good way to manage this would be to place a short nipple in the opening and to it fasten a 3-inch tee and from each opening in the tee carry a riser to each of the two houses. A 2½-inch flow pipe will be sufficient, or, if you have 3-inch pipe, this can be used.

Each house should have 600 feet of radiation; i. e., 600 feet of 3-inch pipe or 1,200 feet of 1½-inch pipe. The 300 feet of 4-inch pipe you have will only give you about 350 feet of the 600 needed for one house. It will therefore take about 500 feet of 1½-inch pipe in addition to provide for one house. If you intend using the 4-inch pipe it would be well to arrange it in an independent coil and supply it by an independent riser from the boiler direct, rather than attempt to carry both sizes on one riser. A 2-inch riser from the boiler will be sufficient for the 300 feet of 4-inch pipe arranged in a coil or manifold. The piping should be distributed as evenly through the houses as possible and whenever practicable the flow pipes should go from the boiler to the most distant point in the houses before entering the radiating coils.

I do not think you can use oil at $1.25 as cheaply as coal at $5. There is no satisfactory arrangement for burning crude oil on low pressure steam or hot-water plants. With high pressure steam, crude oil at 50 to 75 cents per barrel makes an economical fuel. L. C. C.

MOVING VARIOUS PLANTS.

I want some advice in regard to moving some very large white lilacs and Spiraea Van Houttei. They are in the way in laying out a lawn and will have to be removed or destroyed. As I have no other white lilacs I would like to remove these trees if I can successfully do it. Will some one suggest what time would be best and the method of doing it?

There is also quite a large bed of peonies in this yard that will have to be removed. Will they bloom next spring if they are carefully removed? Any suggestions in regard to these questions will be appreciated.

Can I remove a large Crimson Rambler? It has been trained in bush form but is shaded by a large tree and it would seem best to remove it to a sunny location. What time would be best? J. S.

If the lilacs are very old it would be far better to cut them down and secure strong young plants in their stead. If the spiraea is moved it must be cut back severely in order to secure a good growth next season. Peonies are best moved in the fall, in September or October, the earlier the better. If carefully removed these will flower well next season, although the stems may be a little shorter than they were this year. The Crimson Rambler can be moved late in October, but here again we think a strong young plant would give more satisfaction. The spiraea and lilacs could be moved on or after October 1. Care should be taken to have large holes to plant them in and that they are given good compost. Particular care in firming the soil about the roots is also very necessary.

If the Spiraea Van Houttei is very large it would hardly pay to remove it; much better purchase a young plant, as this shrub makes very rapid growth. If it is deemed wise to move the older shrub and lilacs, open a trench three to five feet away from the stems. Go down as deep as the roots penetrate, taking care not to cut or bruise these any more than can be helped. Then use a digging fork or pick and gradually loosen the soil toward the plant to the depth the trench has been opened and saving all roots possible. If the plants are very large it will be difficult without some skilled aid to secure a ball of earth and remove the plants to a new location. A crowbar placed under the bottom of the mass of roots and given a few upward pulls will help to loosen the balls, also a gentle swaying by the stem from side to side.

W. N. CRAIG.

POLLWORTH'S PLANT.

Milwaukee is no inconsiderable center when one comes to count up the important flower producing points. Indeed, there are those who consider Milwaukee the best distributing point in the country for all horticultural supplies, and it is certain that glass area is rapidly on the increase there. The C. C. Pollworth Co.'s range now comprises over 200,000 square feet. The rose and carnation houses are built on modern lines and no details were overlooked in making them thoroughly up-to-date. A feature of the place is the two large cisterns, built of concrete, one being 120 feet long, seven feet deep and thirty feet wide, and the other eighty-five feet long, seven feet deep and thirty-three feet wide. All the rainwater falling on the roofs of the houses drains into these cisterns through 6-inch flows, connected to the iron gutters. Connections are also made so water can be pumped directly from wells should occasion require, but throughout the past summer there was sufficient rain to keep a good supply in the cisterns. There are many advantages in this system. It keeps an even temperature of water, will not scale in boilers and is more beneficial to plants. Two large tanks are also installed for the sterilizing of fertilizers and for feeding with liquid manure under pressure.

There are sixteen houses in the new range, 28x260 feet, almost even-span, with a slight slope to the south. Both hot water and steam are used for heating the plant, Garland gutters, Evans' ventilators and Dietch's Washington red cedar used in the entire construction. The range is planted with the best commercial varieties of roses and carnations.

The old range of twenty-two houses is devoted almost entirely to the growing of palms, ferns, asparagus, lilies, bulb and bedding stock. The entire cut is handled through their down-town store, in addition to the products of many other local growers.

PLANTS FOR WINTER BLOOM.

[An abstract of a paper read before the Canadian Horticultural Society, at Montreal, by Thomas McHugh.]

It would be useless to attempt to enumerate all the plants that could be grown for winter decoration, so I will simply mention those that I have found most satisfactory.

Tydas are capital plants for fall and early winter flowering. Gesneras are also very showy and useful; their richly marked foliage contrasts admirably with the orange and scarlet flowers. We have had great success with gloxinias for winter blooming. A batch of two or three-year-old bulbs started in the fall will flower for months. The flowers last much longer than in summer and are perfectly free from the rust that sometimes attacks them in the warm weather. Gloxinias are one of the most satisfactory plants for table decoration. We grow them in winter in a temperature of 60 to 65 degrees and remove them to the conservatory when they begin to flower.

The first flower to usher in the season proper is the chrysanthemum, a fitting leader to the brilliant procession. In addition to the large exhibition flowers, some of the pompons, which are again coming into favor, should be grown. Also some of the dwarf singles, such as Mispah, Zeno, etc. Besides making an effective edging to the taller plants, they are very useful for room or table decoration.

By the time the chrysanthemums are over, a host of other things will be ready to take their places. Baby primrose grown in 5-inch pots and placed on a shelf where the flower stems can hang down, will be a mass of delicate flowers all winter.

Begonia incarnata is useful for December flowering. Where there is a back wall in the conservatory the old B. nitida grown to single stem six or seven feet high, and spurred in the pruning like a grape vine, will be a sheet of bloom from December to May. All the fibrous-rooted begonias are good. Gloire de Lorraine is of course the queen of begonias at present; whether in pots, pans or baskets it is beautiful and always admired. The new race of begonias sent out by Veitch & Sons rival Lorraine in their season, which is fall and early winter. They originated from crossing B. Socotrana, with late tuberous varieties. The flowers are about three inches across, single and semi-double and, unlike other begonias, are very persistent, lasting two or three weeks. Varieties I have tried and can recommend are: Winter Cheer, rose carmine, semi-double; Ensign, carmine, semi-double; Winter Perfection, rose pink, semi-double, and Mrs. Heal, carmine and scarlet, single, the finest of all.

Poinsettias are indispensable for winter decoration. Plants grown to single stem in 6-inch pots will, with liberal treatment, give bracts eighteen inches across and last for three or four months. Cuttings struck in August and grown four or five together in pans are much sought after for table decoration, especially at Christmas. Poinsettias when grown in pots have a habit of losing their leaves. This I believe to be due to starvation more than anything else. We use Clay's fertilizer freely in the potting soil and feed with liquid manure when the bracts are forming. Although the temperature frequently drops to 40 degrees on cold nights, the plants rarely lose a leaf.

Cyclamen is another grand subject for winter bloom, with the culture of which you are all familiar. A poor strain of this is dear at any price, and will never give satisfaction, no matter how well it is grown. Get the best seed procurable.

Calceolarias although beautiful flowers are hardly worth growing in this climate. Except they have a cool and airy position when in flower, a few hot days in spring will simply melt them. I consider the show pelargonium a much more valuable spring flowering plant.

Amaryllis are very useful plants, easily grown and when in bloom are remarkably handsome. They require but little space, for during the resting period they can be kept in any dry, cool cellar. With a few dozen of these bulbs a succession of flowers can be kept up that will add greatly to a collection of plants during winter and spring.

The geranium as a winter flowering plant must not be forgotten. The English round-flowered varieties are best for this purpose. Plants grown in 5-inch or 6-inch pots and the flowers kept picked off during summer, will flower all winter. Although this is a somewhat plebeian plant, many people enthuse more over a well-flowered geranium than they would over a costly orchid.

Isolepis gracilis grown in 4-inch pots and placed a few inches apart give a very natural effect for edging the benches. Abutilon vexillarium and Vinca variegatum are also used.

ADOLPHUS GUDE.

When one has a younger brother who is president of his local club, an ex-president of the Society of American Florists, and among the most popular members of that body, a modest man is not unlikely to prefer a seat in the rear of the hall when there is anything "doin'"; otherwise things might look too much like family affairs. But in the business life of Washington Adolphus Gude plays no inconspicuous part.

The Gude brothers have been life-long residents at the national capital;

Adolphus was born at Knoxville, Tenn., April 20, 1863, but the family moved to Washington when he was only 7 years of age. He received his education in the public schools and business college of the city, afterward going to work for Nicholas Studer. After he had been with Mr. Studer a short while he was joined by his brother, William F. Gude. When he had worked with the florist for eleven years, he had saved enough to purchase a patch of land near his employer's. This he cultivated, selling his flowers on Mr. Studer's bench in Center market. In 1888 he and his brother obtained ground in Anacostia, where they erected greenhouses and continued to cultivate flowers. One year afterward they opened a modest business at 423 Center market, under the present firm name of A. Gude & Bro. From the start the business increased rapidly, and in a few months the firm opened a store at 938 F street. In 1890 the brothers moved to 1112 F street, but the building was blown down one year afterward. They then leased the building at 1224 F street, where they remained until last fall, when larger quarters became necessary in order to conduct their ever-increasing business in the proper manner, and the new building which the firm had erected at 1214 F street was moved into. Progressiveness, hard and constant work have been the attributes which have brought them success.

Both the Gude brothers are "joiners." Adolphus Gude is a member of a number of civic and fraternal organizations. In the Masons he is member of Anacostia Lodge, No. 21, of which he is a past master, and at present treasurer. He is past high priest of Washington Naval Royal Arch Chapter, No. 6, and also past high priest of Anacostia Royal Arch Chapter, No. 13, besides being an officer of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the District of Columbia. He is a past commander of the De Molay Mounted Commandery, and also a member of Almas Temple, Mystic Shrine, and a Scottish Rite Mason. In the Odd Fellows he is a member of Central Lodge, No. 1. He is past patron of Electa Chapter, No. 2, Order of the Eastern Star, and also a past grand patron of the order in the District. For a number of years he has been a member of the Board of Trade and of the Business Men's Association. He is treasurer and manager of the Anacostia Brick Company, and a director of the German Orphan Asylum. He is a member of the Washington Florists' Club, and a life member of the Society of American Florists.

Club Meeting.

Our last club meeting, on September 20, was a "corker." After the regular business had been attended to our president, George Bayer, read a letter from Mr. Sullivan, of the Detroit Club, sending congratulations and then Gladiolus Cushman, of Sylvania, our vice-president, gave us an informal talk on dahlias. Mr. Cushman brought a lot of cut flowers to illustrate his address, including single, pompon, cactus and show dahlias. A vase of his Sylvia was a sight worth looking at. Among others a lot of Countess of Lonsdale found many admirers. In fact, there was not a flower in the entire lot but would satisfy anybody. Mr. Cushman is a very interesting speaker and I know of one man who lit his cigar four times during the hour and a half Mr. Cushman spoke and then had quite a cigar left. Questions were answered by Mr. Cushman at the conclusion of his speech. George Bayer brought down a few asters with 30-inch stems that found a great many admirers.

Nearly all the members were present but T. Magee, of Scottwood, who had to hustle to get a big wedding decoration also hustling along a new 100-foot house.

E. Kuhnke started last week on a house 22x100, Moninger material, with side ventilation with pipe posts set in concrete and 18-inch glass, like those he has in all the older houses. He expects to finish up in about two weeks.

Crane Bros., lettuce growers, have only added one house 42x150 feet this season to their seven acres of glass.

G. W. Haebich, florist in charge at the Insane Asylum, has everything in good shape, but has been troubled very much with cut worms and grub worms in the flower beds. A. Davis, the landscape man, had the same trouble. The lawn would die off in small spots and in taking up a handful of the dried grass one would uncover perhaps a half dozen fat grubs. The asylum is worth a visit from anybody. It is built in the shape of a village, with each of the cottages containing about forty inmates. There are about eighty acres of lawns, ponds and flower beds, all kept in tip-top shape. The mild insane inmates do all the work at the institution under the supervision of experienced men. E. A. K.

A WISCONSIN EXHIBIT.

The accompanying illustration shows the exhibit of J. Sylvester, Oconto, Wis., at the county fair held September 5 to 9. He had one of the most attractive displays at the fair. The four plants in the front of the exhibit are Adiantum Croweanum, which he says grows finely in a house of mixed plants. He says he had poor success with adiantums until this one was tried.

BOUVARDIAS.

A short time previous to lifting bouvardias a spade should be put round the plants to cut the roots, and thus minimize the check the plants will receive when they are lifted. It is not advisable to leave them out after this date, without they have been planted out in a box frame. If they are very large, a neat stake to which to secure a few of the shoots and keep the plant in position will be necessary. They may be returned to the frame in which they have been growing, or be put in another pit. Shade from the sun. Syringe nightly, and give but little air for a few days, especially if strong winds prevail. Others that have been growing in pots, which is far the best method, may be taken under glass; and, if early bloom is required, they may at once be given a warmer temperature, and supplied with liquid manure. For small vases and for button-holes these are very useful.—Gardeners' Magazine.

LINCOLN, NEB.—Chapin Bros. lost about 5,000 lights of glass by hail on September 15. The hail belt was not over 200 yards wide and the storm was of very brief duration, but it hit them hard.

NEW YORK.—Whenever the price of American window glass reaches a certain figure there is at once an increase in the importations of Belgian window glass. The last boat from Antwerp had on board 146,538 boxes of window glass, and as the window glass industry there is only beginning to recover from the depression of recent years, it may be said that all the requirements of American greenhouse owners can be met at reasonable prices next spring, if not by the American manufacturers, then by the jobbers in Belgian glass.

done in time. But the club will get even with him, as he is elected to give a lecture in the near future on how to raise greenhouse cats.

Various Notes.

J. H. Siegrist is beginning to feel a little easier on that lame foot, which he got by being thrown from his wagon about six weeks ago, and he comes to every meeting anyway.

John Gratopp put in a gasoline engine to pump water in case the mill gives trouble. He is starting to cut a great many carnations of good quality, but as yet with short stems.

John Barrow has finished two new houses eighty feet long for carnations. In company with Mrs. Barrow, he made a trip to New York last week on some Odd Fellow "doings."

Krueger Bros. have finished their new houses and are ready for the winter.

Armin Suder is putting in another eighty-five horse-power steam boiler and

CHICAGO.

The Market.

September has averaged warmer than normal, and the result has been that during most of the month stock has been in somewhat heavier supply than it otherwise would have been, and the general impression seems to be that prices have averaged lower than through September in recent years. However, trade is now quite active, and, with a shorter supply this week, receipts are well cleaned up, with tendencies toward stiffer prices. This week has seen the first of the fall openings, which annually call for a large amount of stock and mark the real beginning of the autumn season. These have called for not only considerable quantities of cut flowers, but several thousand strings of asparagus and smilax, which the market had no difficulty in supplying.

The call for Beauties has exceeded the supply and prices have advanced. Many growers, however, report that a new and heavy crop will be on within a week and adequate supplies of improved quality are anticipated, with a probability of a return to the prices prevailing earlier in the month. With warm days and cool nights, some of the careless growers have mildew, but in general, tea roses of excellent quality may be had for all requirements. There is still plenty of short stock for funeral purposes, but not the glut of last week. Excellent Richmond are now seen and a few good La Detroit. Killarney is still short of stem, but very well liked.

Receipts of carnations continue quite large and some of the stock now shows very fair stem. Enchantress brings the top price. The short stock is hard to move, as there are still enough asters to supply the demand for cheap stuff for funeral purposes.

A few chrysanthemums are now to be had daily. Some first-class yellows have been in the market this week and have sold for $4 per dozen. It will not be long before all requirements can be met as to color, quality and price, although in general the mums are about a week later than the growers thought they would be.

Outdoor lilies are gone, but there are a few Harrisii, on which prices have advanced. There are daily receipts of violets of fair quality. Last week the eastern violets were in bad condition, due to the hot weather. Gladioli are no longer received in large quantity and the pressure of outdoor stock is each day having less effect on the prices of staple items.

Newspapers.

The wholesale florists use old newspapers for lining cut flower boxes and for wrapping in severe weather. The quantities required for these purposes are something surprising, very many tons being used each year. Weiland & Risch bought three tons of Sunday papers the other day, and it was not an unusual purchase. The Chicago daily papers are not returnable, but the Sunday papers are, and many thousands of copies accumulate on the publishers' hands. These are sold to dealers in paper stock and they in turn supply the florists at $16 per ton. The wholesalers do not believe in yellow journalism. They say the red, blue, green and other kinds of ink come off.

Various Notes.

There was another meeting of members of the executive committee of the Horticultural Society and a few others Tuesday afternoon at the office of the Benthley-Coatsworth Co. Flower show arrangements were furthered. Every-thing indicates a first-class show.

F. F. Benthley returned Monday night from a visit to the firm's plant at New Castle. He was well pleased with the condition of stock there, particularly with Richmond and Killarney roses.

C. W. McKellar has a new specialty, cotton on long stems, just as it grows in the south.

Henry Seger, at Washington Heights, has a field of 6,000 aster plants, from which he has sent to the E. F. Winterson Co. 50,650 first-class flowers.

John Muno, at Rogers Park, had six houses of Beauties which are in splendid shape and just coming into fine crop. He is growing no tea roses this year, the balance of his place being in carnations, thirteen houses of them.

Miss Lillian Tonner, who was for years with E. H. Hunt, has leased space in the Flower Growers' Market and is preparing to start a supply business there. She has partitioned off sufficient space for her purpose and is now receiving goods. Miss Tonner is well known to the trade and should do well in her new venture.

Jacob Phillip, Sr., who is one of the old-time vegetable growers at Rogers Park, this spring put up eight new 150-foot houses and with two older houses planted them all to carnations. He has over 40,000 plants and, although the stock was planted late, it is coming along in fine shape. The cut will go to the Holton & Hunkel Co., at Milwaukee. The Milwaukee market is securing a considerable part of the Rogers Park cut this year.

Ziska has bought out the wire-work firm which was located in the Growers' Market.

The Florists' Club will meet tonight. The principal order of business is the nomination of new officers and the discussion of various plans for club activity this winter. Everyone seems to favor the change to one meeting a month. Music and refreshments are on the program for tonight.

The Geo. M. Garland Co. has contracts for 15,000 feet of iron gutters for early spring delivery. From contracts already closed and from inquiries received, Mr. Garland says the indications are that there will be more building by the large growers the coming season than ever before. There will be much rebuilding, besides a number of new ranges. Both J. A. Budlong and Peter Reinberg have announced that they will rebuild all their houses not now equipped with iron gutters.

This spring the south park commissioners raised a storm of protest by opening the parks to athletic contests on Sunday, and now they have brought upon themselves another deluge of protests through the announcement in the daily papers that they are about to erect iron fences entirely around Washington and Jackson parks.

Frank S. Howard, head gardener for Mrs. Geo. M. Pullman, is laid up with an attack of rheumatism.

E. C. Amling is receiving some very fine Monrovia chrysanthemums.

Friedman had the decoration at Carson Pirie's this week. He used 500 strings of asparagus and considerable quantities of cut flowers. Next week there will be several other important department store decorations.

Kennicott Bros. Co. have built a new ice-box for ferns and galax. They had the first yellow mums on September 23, very good in quality.

C. L. Washburn has been figuring on the amount of new glass producing for this market this season. He estimates the increase at something over a million square feet, four of the local establishments providing over half a million feet.

Vaughan & Sperry have advices to the effect that beginning October 1 they will have large receipts of violets from the same growers who sent them so many first-class sweet peas this spring.

Mary Lewis, formerly with F. C. Smith, at Ashland, Wis., is now in Bassett & Washburn's city office.

Poehlmann Bros. Co. have repainted and redecorated the city salesroom this week, to have it in the best of shape for the season's rush.

L. Koropp, of the Sheridan Park Floral Co., used several wagon-loads of palms and ferns and a considerable quantity of asparagus in a Siegel Cooper decoration on Tuesday.

Visitors.

There have been many visitors in town the past week, among them: L. M. Noe, of Madison, N. J., who will spend a couple of weeks with D. Wood Brant, at Forest Glen; Wm. Hy. Evans, of Colo-

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The tone of business has slightly improved, the receipts continuing larger as the season advances, while the demand improves though not sufficiently to create much life. Showier outdoor flowers continue most popular, dahlias leading. The first chrysanthemums have made their appearance, but are not as yet sufficiently plentiful to become a factor. Violets are also coming into town, chiefly single varieties, but as yet there is not much demand. The department store decorations described last week have been continued this week in other departments of the same stores, using quantities of outdoor material. Wild smilax has also been used freely. Asters are declining, purple being almost out of market. Fortunately carnations are becoming much more plentiful; though still short of stem, they are of better quality. There are few good orchids and some gardenias, while lily of the valley is rather scarce.

The Liberty Rose.

H. B. Howard, when in this city last month, spoke with Wm. J. Muth of the fame of the Liberty roses grown near Philadelphia, saying that they were known and appreciated in the west. The cut this season promises to equal, if not excel, that of last year. Leaving out of consideration A. Farenwald, the pioneer Liberty grower, as his cut will probably go to New York, John Burton has a number of houses planted with Liberty which those who have seen them tell me are finer than ever before. Edward Towill will send S. S. Pennock Liberties from his whole short-span range, besides from two or three other houses. Joseph Beavis & Son will send the Leo Niessen Co. Liberties from two large houses, while J. Stevenson, of Oak Lane, will send the same company Liberties from nearly his entire place. Alfred Burton will send the Flower Market Liberties from one-third of his new place just completed. Robert Scott & Son will send to E. Reid and S. S. Pennock Liberties from several houses. Joseph Heacock, John C. Andrea, Myers & Samtman, F. & H. Mergenthaler and other growers have more or less of this great rose, which seems to assure a plentiful supply during the coming season.

Various Notes.

Wm. P. Craig's many friends will be interested to know that he expects to desert the bachelors and join the ranks of the benedicts next Wednesday.

Wm. Thompson has accepted a position in the Finley-Acker Co.'s flower store.

D. T. Connor has had a great week marketing boilers, placing no less than seven. One, a very large Burnham sectional boiler, goes to the Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa.

Wm. J. Muth, the genial manager of the Philadelphia Cut Flower Co., has returned to his post after a week's illness.

The Rutledge Nursery Co. continues sending early white chrysanthemums to Edward Reid.

Cosmos in three colors is now fine. E. Bernheimer shows a nice line of these flowers.

ing fine Enchantress and single violets to the Flower Market.

I am indebted to M. Rice for the "new ideas" given last week.

Wm. C. Smith expects to build a store and show house in front of his greenhouse establishment at Sixty-first and Market streets. Mr. Smith finds the retail business in West Philadelphia is rapidly increasing.

Dumont & Co. have completed improvements in their wholesale commission house. New counters conveniently arranged, new Welsbach lights, very powerful, and a new ice-box 12x12x10 feet, ingeniously arranged with a movable partition, windows admitting outside air, an economy in winter, a double entrance and two-ton ice capacity, are among the advantages.

Hugh Graham decorated the exposition hall in West Philadelphia on Monday for the Street Railway Convention.

Charles Leisy has 10,000 carnation plants benched at his new place at Wenonah, N. J. Mr. Leisy is manager for Stephen Green. He is a grower of ability and considered quite an acquisition of the Flower Market growers.

Herbert Steinmetz has joined the forces of J. J. Habermehl's Sons at the Bellevue-Stratford.

Berger Bros. are receiving nice flowers of the new rose, Richmond, from the United States Cut Flower Co., at Elmira, N. Y. John Berger speaks highly of this rose.

The quality of dahlias from Atco, N. J., is improving. Some of the finest sorts can now be had in quantity.

Joseph Callahan is now with Frank L. Polites in the Haseltine building.

Visitors to the Whilldin Pottery Company's office on Wharton street who are shown the inner sanctum will find there a very clever picture of Bardolph and Falstaff, the characters being impersonated by W. K. Harris and the late Burt Eddy. Next to this picture is another taken at Ventnor, N. J., in 1893, when the convention was held at Atlantic City. On the other side is a photograph which Mr. Whilldin will show you with pardonable pride.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., has returned from a very successful western trip.

The H. F. Michell Co. reports an unusually heavy demand for tulips and choice narcissi, one mail order running as high as 50,000 of the former.

Paul Berkowitz, of Bayersdorfer & Co., returned a week ago from his western trip. He was cordially received everywhere and was more than pleased with the results.

Johnson & Stokes have decorated their seed store with some fine plants from the Moorestown nurseries, including Ficus elastica, sago palms and Boston ferns.

The Ideal Salesman.

The REVIEW realizes that the position of a cut flower and plant salesman is one of importance to the grower, to the wholesaler, to the retailer and to the consumer. The REVIEW believes that a high standard among the salesmen will do much to promote the interests of all those who buy or sell cut flowers or plants, and to promote harmony among them. The REVIEW therefore proposes a prize essay competition similar to that held by the S. A. F. under the following conditions:

The subject of the essay shall be "The Ideal Salesman."

Each competitor shall mail his essay, unsigned, on or before September 30, 1905, to Phil, care of any of the wholesale cut flower houses in this city.

Each essay must be unsigned, accompanied by the writer's name and address in a sealed envelope. This envelope will not be opened until the awards have been made.

The essays and sealed envelopes will be numbered when received and the essays will be submitted to a competent judge. His awards will be announced in the Review of October 12.

The first prize will be $10, the second prize $5.

It is especially desired that the essays be clear, concise and to the point.

The Chester Valley.

I will not tire you with a list of the roses that David and Jonathan saw in the houses of the Conard & Jones Co. There were gold medal winners from Lambert, unknown but by no means unpromising; debutantes from Cook, old favorites of international fame, like Marechal Niel, and of local fame, like Magnafrano. All classes, all ages were there. Antoine Wintzer described them in a way that proved he "had it all there," as Mr. Conard humorously remarked. Mr. Wintzer was propagating; they are nearly always propagating at Conard & Jones Co.'s. They don't wait for January 1 or for bottom heat. They don't insist on boarding up their bench or in the virtue of shading cloth of a certain thickness. Mr. Wintzer does not, in fact, believe in any "circus," as he naively expresses it. But then, neither would you nor I were we in class A, section 1, as propagators. As long as the thermometer shows 60 degrees there is no heat used. The rose cuttings are put in clean white sand—rotten rock—in the side bench of an ordinary rose house, with a light lime wash on the glass above, and they root in September and grow like weeds. Jonathan showed deep interest in the propagating arrangements. Chairs were placed at a deal table where the propagators worked. "Why make a job harder than need be?" Mr. Wintzer asked. Jonathan confessed to a preference for the back-number way of standing up at the bench, and hinted at a fear of drowsiness on a warm afternoon, a suggestion that was treated with the scorn it deserved.

The cannas alone were worth the whole trip ten times over. David and Jonathan agreed on that. There were about 50,000 of them, of some fifty varieties of recognized merit, besides any number of seedlings and hybrids on trial. Canna lilies they are well called here. First came a lot of varieties of Mr. Wintzer's own production, leaders in their classes; then a great triple row of Mont Blanc, dwarf white; Gladiator, medium yellow spotted, and Louisiana, tall scarlet, stretching away down the slope for 600 feet or more, each variety in full bloom. Then followed sort after sort of rare merit, including many still under number. Great progress has been made in the whites, as shown in Mont Blanc and in its seedlings, and in the pinks. A point of interest is that Maiden Blush, one of the softest shades of the latter color, a seedling of Mr. Wintzer's, of ten years ago, has not since been improved or even equaled. The greatest advance now is in the orchid-flowering class of canna lilies of the second generation, the pollen of the former class being used on the class with more substantial flowers. The improvement is remarkable in every respect. When comparing Austria, Italia and Alemannia with Louisiana, the former varieties are simply not in it.

David took a deep interest in California, a variety that had been condemned by a warm personal friend. David's

We grow these two superb new varieties in large quantities and are now ready to offer a fine cut of them. KILLARNEY is in a class by itself, a rose that sells on sight. RICHMOND can't be beat as a red rose—fragrance, color and keeping quality are right there.

Our Brides, Maids, Liberties, Beauties, etc., are now in fine shape. We can furnish them in quantity and of very fine quality. Carnations in both new and standard sorts. Everything in season at lowest market rates.

opinion of California is not, up to the present at least, as pronounced as that of his w. p. f., or, pardon the poor joke, as that of G. L. Grant.

I might write for hours of Mr. Winter's instructive talk of what he showed David and Jonathan. Suffice it to say that the latter left convinced that for simple, every-day bedding, Brandywine, scarlet, bronze foliage, and Buttercup, yellow, green foliage, are hard to beat. The former is medium, the latter dwarf. PHIL.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

The temperature the past week acted something like the business, one day up in the nineties, the next day near the frost line. Business is improving, but only in a small way. Local demand is for the better quality of stock. The cooler weather has also encouraged the retailers to carry much larger stocks than for some months back.

The call for light-colored material was quite lively the past week and the market was cleaned up pretty well, except in roses, of which there are more than the demand calls for. Brides and Maids are small and more or less mildewed. In red roses Meteor is good. First quality Beauties sell readily, but are scarce. Plenty of short and medium are to be had.

Carnations are improving every day. Good white sell well, also Lawson and Enchantress. The latter variety will be grown this season in large quantities by our local growers. Very little outdoor stock is coming in. Cosmos is slow in making its appearance this season. Some very fine dahlias are to be had, also single tuberoses. More chrysanthemums are expected next week. All "greens" are plentiful.

Various Notes.

E. J. Fancourt, representing Pennock, of Philadelphia, has been in town selling ribbons.

E. W. Guy, A. G. Fehr and Henry Emunds, of Belleville, who were over the past week, report trade fairly good with them in the cut flower line.

Beyer Bros. have received their importation of bulbs and are busy potting some 20,000 for the holiday trade.

Fred Weber, Jr., has returned from his eastern trip. The store has just received a fine lot of palms for the fall trade. The large conservatory is very attractive.

Henry Felter, on Lexington avenue, will have a fine lot of pot chrysanthemums for the local trade.

George Windler is in great shape for the fall trade, having several hundred extra fine chrysanthemum plants.

George Waldbart has imported a fine stock of arecas, kentias and other decorative stock. The past week he was showing as a novelty, night blooming cereus, which attracted a great deal of attention.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers has her big show house full of extra fine decorative plants. She reports trade very good.

The Ellison Floral Co. had several large funeral designs the past week for Banker Parson's funeral.

C. A. Kuehn has been handling some superb dahlias, also a fine lot of Richmond rose and the first white chrysanthemums this season.

Frank M. Ellis is handling a fine lot of Carnot and Kaiserin roses from Miss Belle Miller, of Springfield, also extra fine valley from A. Berdan.

George Angermueller is receiving a fine lot of first-class roses and a big lot of good outdoor stock.

Henry Berning received the first consignment of California violets. Extra good carnations were also seen at his place.

Theo. Miller's show house is very attractive, with a fine lot of palms and other decorative stock. Mr. Miller also has a big trade in fall bulbs.

Mr. Giger, of New London, Conn., has taken a position with Grim & Gorley as design maker. Mr. Gorley reports that they have given up their down-town branch on Olive street.

The committee in charge of the flower show held a meeting last week to dispose of some of the details connected with the exhibition. The meeting was attended by all the members, and Messrs. Weber, Guy, Miller and Meinhardt say that this exhibition will be the best the St. Louis club has ever held. The program will soon be in the hands of the printer. The club members to a man are pulling hard for its success since the report and statement of Chairman Weber at the last club meeting.

The committee of the Florists' Club to stop "crape pulling," which is composed of J. F. Windt, Carl Beyer and F. J. Fillmore, held a meeting the past week. This committee is doing good work.

Bowling.

Carl Beyer was on last Monday elected captain of the team which represents the club in the Palace league. A. Y. Ellison was elected representative of the club to the league meetings. The club has seven members, Carl Beyer, C. A. Kuehn, Robert Meinhardt, A. Y. Ellison, J. J. Beneke, Theo. Miller and H. Lohrenz. This team rolled its first match last week, pitted against the champion Hyde Parks, and made a good showing, losing the odd game. Capt. Beyer was high with 542, Beneke 525, Kuehn 513, Ellison 505 and Meinhardt 478. The games were as follows:

The Season's Business.

It would seem to be the opinion of the craft that the season just closing has been about a fair average one, a great deal better than the past two years and yet disappointing in view of what it bid fair to be at its opening in July, which was very active indeed. An extra good season here always means a goodly number of the largest entertainments, that use up immense quantities of stock and run into the thousands of dollars, but the functions for the most part have been small as regards the floral decorations, although there have really been a great number of them. After Labor day we always feel that the beginning of the season's end has come, although of late years more and more people are staying through September and even October.

While from the peony season to the last of the dahlias all flowers are liked and employed in every sort of a function by the society folk, there are three that Newport can never get enough of, namely, American Beauty roses, orchids and gardenias. As regards retail prices, this summer they have been well maintained and among the Bellevue avenue florists have run about as follows: Best long Beauties, $6 a dozen; good catleyas, $1.50 each, and gardenias $5 to $6 a dozen; gladioli, $1 a dozen; carnations, $1 to $1.50 a dozen; lily of the valley, $2 to $3 a bunch of twenty-five; sweet peas, 50 cents a hundred.

Horticultural Society.

Our society has met regularly every other week all summer, and the attendance has been larger than ever before and is constantly increasing. Several very interesting and instructive lectures have been given before the society, notably a talk on sweet corn the evening of August 2, which was opened by William C. Elliott, and a lecture August 16, fully illustrated by charts, on the gypsy and brown tail moths, also San Jose scale, by George T. Powell, bringing out the largest gathering of the year.

Of course the annual autumn exhibition, held September 11 to 13, was the great feature of the season. For the first time in some years this show was held in the famous casino and, as was expected, there was a large attendance of society folk. The dahlia is one of Newport's crazes and this part of the show was the largest ever held here. Special prizes were awarded for the best twenty-five blooms each of the four most desirable solid colors, any type. Among whites, Winsome was considered by far the best. The flowers are large and the strong stems hold the blooms absolutely erect, face upward. It is certainly the finest pure white cactus dahlia in sight at the present time. For the best red flower in the show the judges gave the award to Katherine Duer. It is a grand color, a living red, and nothing as yet has been able to displace it as a decorative sort. The beautiful delicate pink Kriemhilde distanced everything of its color. It is certainly a magnificent variety and has established itself as a favorite here, although of such recent introduction. The old standard, Mrs. Charles Turner, again this season held first place among yellows. Some day this fine cactus variety will no doubt be superseded, but it will be a good flower that takes its place. It is worthy of note that while these prizes are open to any type of dahlia, in three cases out of four the award went to a cactus variety, showing clearly the popularity of the pointed petaled type at the present time.

The dinner-table decoration prizes were, one for the best centerpiece of dahlias, the other for the best centerpiece of outdoor flowers, exclusive of roses and dahlias. There were fifteen entries in the two classes. Gibson Bros. took first prize for the best centerpiece of dahlias, with a beautiful mound of Kriemhilde, with Adiantum cuneatum for foliage. The second prize in this class went to the Bythesea Greenhouses, John Marshall, manager, for an elegant combination of Volker dahlias and Adiantum Farleyense. In the class where dahlias and roses were not to be used, Colin Robertson, gardener to Mrs. Golet, with a most tasty arrangement of Anemone Japonica alba, secured first prize. Second prize went to Alexander McLellan, gardener to Mrs. Clark, for a round basket piece of nasturtiums so tastefully arranged with its own foliage that its very simplicity made it a winner. These dinner-table decoration classes were not judged by the regular committee of the society, but by three society women. This custom has resulted in the greatest good to all concerned.

There were many other noteworthy exhibits. A new variety of saxifraga, under the name of S. sarmentosa tricolor superba, from the conservatories of H. H. Rogers, Fairhaven, attracted much attention. The leaves of this new alpine plant are handsomely marked with creamy white, yellow and red variegations. James Garthley, the head gardener, always has something very choice on hand in show plants. Our society awarded him for this plant a silver medal.

The splendid collection of aquatics from H. A. Dreer, Philadelphia, was perhaps the most striking exhibit in the show. Several special awards were made to it, including a silver medal to the superb new pink, Nymphæa Bissetii.

Newport's Carnival.

Newport has been having an "old home week." Perhaps the greatest feature of all the many attractions was the carnival parade. Of a score of most elaborate floats, the entry of the Newport Horticultural Society was one of the best. On a large dray drawn by six horses was a small conservatory surrounded by all the lawn that the truck would permit. The greenhouse was filled with bright crotons and surrounded by a veritable flower garden. The letters N. H. S. in small plants were prominent in the lawn. A large bay tree was placed at each corner of the float. Electric lights were employed. Great masses of salvias, hydrangeas and other outdoor flowers decorated every part, including the horses, and the attendants in white at the horses' heads added a finish to a most artistic carnival decoration. Too much praise cannot be given to the special committee, consisting of James J. Sullivan, David McIntosh, Alexander McLellan, Bruce Butterson, James McLeish and Joseph Gibson, whose hard work accomplished such splendid results. This display has boomed our society greatly here.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Clearer weather conditions following a spell of dark, damp weather seem to have braced up the market. Certainly the outlook is now quite encouraging for good fall trade. Roses improve in quality and are selling a little higher all around. Carnations are not yet sufficient for the demand, although the supply is steadily increasing. The best stock has brought up to $3 and $4 per hundred. A few single violets come in from a number of growers, but are not yet in much request. Fitzwygram is the only chrysanthemum seen.

The supply of salable outdoor flowers is steadily diminishing. Asters are poorer and gladioli quite scarce. Some Japanese anemones are seen. These should be grown more commercially. They are very useful at a rather dull season. There is nothing new in the market and no special change in any other flowers or green stock.

Club Meeting.

In our last we made short reference to the meeting held September 18. An attendance of close to 100 on a damp night was encouraging and the addition of fifty-three new members even more so. This makes exactly 100 new members added during the present year. While the discussion over the proposed S. A. F. show brought out a divergence of opinion in regard to the advisability of its being held in Boston next spring, it was not occasioned by any antagonism to the S. A. F., but rather to the apparent fact that the show business seemed likely to be overdone so far as Boston was concerned in the first quarter of 1906. The attendance of prominent S. A. F. officials hoped for next month may, however, clear the air and make smoother sailing. Boston gave the S. A. F. the only real show it ever had, in 1890, and is ready to do so again, given ample notice.

The North Shore Horticultural Society, of Manchester, will attend the meeting of the club on October 17, a motion to extend an invitation being unanimously carried. Joseph Clark, of Manchester, was elected an honorary member. Mr. Clark recently retired from charge of the gardens of Mrs. H. L. Higginson, where he had been for many years. His garden was a most unique one, the collection of hardy plants, many alpine included, being very extensive. Mr. Clark is one of the most respected members of the craft in Massachusetts and the club made no mistake in honoring him.

The invitation to visit the Waban Conservatories will afford the club an opportunity to see Mr. Montgomery's splendid village of rose houses next month.

The exhibits were quite interesting. Julius Heurlin had a fine collection of hardy asters and received a report of merit for A. amellus var. Blue Hills. Robert Cameron received a similar award for well known Nerine Fothergilli major.

Among those who made remarks on the proposed S. A. F. show were W. H. Elliott, J. K. M. L. Farquhar, K. Finlayson, M. A. Patten, Peter Fisher, G. M. Anderson and W. N. Craig. Indications now point to a considerable addition of new members on October 17 and the membership ere January 1, 1906, will undoubtedly reach 250.

Various Notes.

Extra fine Beauty and Wellesley roses are seen at the stores, coming from Waban Conservatories.

Quite a number of seasonable orchids are at present used in the high class stores, Oncidium Rogersii, Vanda cœrulea and Cattleya labiata being mostly seen.

The school gardens committee of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society had no less than 200 entries of home gardens this year. The good work being done by this committee would seem to merit an increased appropriation for next season's work.

David Smith, of Stranraer, Scotland, is making his annual visit among gardeners and florists in this section, selling hardy roses, fruit trees and other nursery stock.

In our report of the fall show in the last issue or the REVIEW we somehow wrote that Gloriosa superba was the glory pea of Australia. We were thinking of Clanthus Dampieri and somehow got the two confused. Gloriosa superba is a tropical plant, sometimes called the climbing lily.

The berried shrubs in the arboretum and parkways at present are very attractive. The tints on the forest trees and shrubs are also very fine.

Local bulb dealers report demand as very good, but a killing frost is needed to make business really brisk.

Carnation Helen Goddard with S. J. Goddard is looking fine at present. Mr. Goddard reports many visitors to see it and a lot of orders on hand for stock.

J. T. Butterworth is cutting some fine Cattleya labiata and other seasonable orchids.

Current Comment.

Nothing of note has happened in my rather long silence except a month's ideal weather. September is usually, with us, a glorious month. A few cold nights to remind us to be careful but we also had a few tropical days, when it stood 86 degrees in the shade at 2 p. m., but a month of fruit, flowers and sunshine.

From several causes there has been an awakening of business. Last week four of our largest department stores held their fall openings. As two of the establishments have cut flower and plant departments, they, of course, managed their own decorations, renting the palms and other stuff where they could do best. S. A. did the other two and the coming week will see a lot more in this line. We have not heard of any society events calling for much of the floral art or material.

The gladiolus and aster have been the staple flowers for weeks and the sight of them is getting tiresome. Asters are getting to be poor, scrubby things and people are looking for the old favorites, roses and carnations. Enchantress, Lady Bountiful and Boston Market can be had in fair quantity and excellent quality. As usual, Charlie Guenther is sending very fine Bridesmaid and Bride. Large quantities of American Beauties are daily received by Wm. F. Kasting and all seem to go. It is only the truth to say that "Billy" Palmer buys more and sells more of this queen of roses than all the florists of Erie county put together. Get your reputation built for always having a fine stock of some most desirable article and there is no limit to what you can do.

We hear that two of our number are nosing around for ward honors in our city government. S. A. Anderson is looking for the nomination for supervisor of the Twenty-fourth ward, the most popular and wealthy in the city, and W. A. Adams is looking for a similar job in his ward, I think the Twenty-second. Let them go it. I can only say they are both immensely ahead in intelligence of the average city supervisor. Most city supervisors are keepers of lager beer saloons. If not that, the remainder are worse. For worse they call them "real estate and insurance," so I trust our brother florists will be elected to help along pure and economical government, but if Andy Adams should become a supervisor and any one from a school janitor to an alderman should turn up their toes, you can bet Andy will be on hand without any false modesty.

I spent 15 cents in car fare Sunday afternoon, the first time in weeks I had ventured from home. First I went over to Delaware avenue to see "Aleck" Scott and his neat place. He does not pretend to grow a great variety, only what the houses are suitable for. It is a cemetery trade, cut flowers and vase-filling in May. Just now the two principal houses are filled with mums, looking very good. Kalb, the good-growing, early white, will be fit to cut in a week. What pleasant associations these chrysanthemums do recall and we welcome the early varieties with gladness.

Our next stop was out on Summer street to see Joe Streidel, who manages the old Katoll place for Mr. Anderson. We have realized for several years that Joseph was a high-class gardener and greenhouse man, but never more so than now. Here, too, the area of glass is too limited to grow a great variety and specialties are handled for Mr. Anderson's fine store, poinsettias in every size and shape, a fine bench of cyclamens, ficus and araucarias, but Joseph's pride is his Begonia Lorraine. Not in my travels anywhere have I seen their size and health excelled. He has his 2,000 little plants for next year already potted from the sand. He does not think he lost a cutting, but he has a method of his own.

Then we strolled up to see L. H. Neubeck, corner Main and High. Here is a different place, for "Louie" has a fine retail business and it is all done there. There is no attempt to grow cut flowers, except bulbs, but the place is kept most attractive with ferns and palms, the most popular plants. He has a great corner and most substantial and elegant houses and no one knows better how to look after a good business.

And then we climbed aboard a trolley car and were as weary and glad to land at our door as the migratory bird who has sailed a thousand miles north to his last year's favorite meadow or orchard. I may get back my old strength some day, but it's a long time in coming.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

With "a cold and nipping air," clear skies and brilliantly lit and artistically decorated retail windows, one walking up Broadway and Fifth avenue on Monday evening of this week could easily imagine that the clouds had lifted from the market and "the good time coming" had actually arrived. Everything felt and looked like a busy winter evening and retailers were as busy as they could expect to be before October. Stores are open later again, wholesalers have lengthened their hours materially, and stock of all kinds, except the outdoor product, is rapidly improving. Everybody seems expectant and hopeful of a splendid season. It is in the air, but on Tuesday and Wednesday depression was again felt in the wholesale district.

Dahlias are abundant. Peacock is sending to the New York market daily some of the finest blooms ever seen here. The common stock is unpopular and can hardly be disposed of at any price. Asters are in the "sere and yellow leaf." This week evidently will about see the end of them. Gladioli evidently are without end. There is no let-up to the flood. It is hard, sometimes, to move them at any price. Retail windows illustrate the popularity and increased shipments of the orchid. Prices hold well and the demand from other cities grows constantly.

Fine valley was selling for $3 per hundred the first of the week and grand lilies are again abundant. Wild smilax is in demand and from now on the daily shipments from the south may be depended upon. The quality is excellent. Kreshover was shipping a good many boxes out of the city Monday.

Chrysanthemums are here. For two weeks Dailedouze Bros. have been sending in the big pink, Montmort, and a Broadway florist has found a quick market for all of them. In another week or two they will be in every window.

American Beauties are improving in size and quality, and plenty for the demand are arriving daily. Thirty-four boxes of them reached the Cut Flower Co. Monday morning. The "Beauty king" was in his glory. Mr. Pierson was down from Scarboro to see how his pets were appreciated. The best brought $25 per hundred easily.

Violets are everywhere, better in color, but too small by half and too abundant for the demand. The top price for the best of them was 50 cents. The cold snap is helping their sale and if they can be kept out of the clutches of the street merchants all will yet be well and the fear of a retrograde movement dispelled.

Chrysanthemums: Commencing October 7 will have fancy Mums at $3.00 and $4.00 per doz.

ROSES: Maids, Brides, Liberties, Richmond, Uncle John.

Carnations: THE BEST IN CHICAGO. $1.00 to $2.00 per 100.

Violets: Are coming now in very good condition. 50c to $1.00 per 100.

A. L. RANDALL CO., 19-21 RANDOLPH STREET CHICAGO, ILL.

It would be a calamity for the whole market to find violets selling at $1 a thousand.

Various Notes.

Patrick O'Mara is back from his summer outing in the west, a picture of health and filled to the brim with memories of his experiences in Portland, California and the Yellowstone. The Florists' Club may anticipate a rare treat at its next meeting, October 9, when Mr. O'Mara tells the story of his "wild and woolly" travels.

The new wholesale store of Thos. Young, Jr., is complete and very handsome, with an abundance of room and elegant private offices in the rear.

A grand floral piece, the work of Samuel Gomperts, went over to Brooklyn on Monday evening, a gift from the artist to Senator Reynolds on the occasion of the opening of the new Montauk theater. It was an enormous floral punch-bowl on a standard three feet in circumference, in pink and white roses with handsome French dolls surrounding the bowl, some fifteen feet around it. An enormous vase of American Beauties ten feet high accompanied the emblem.

Bowe hobnobbed with one of the Wall street kings, John W. Gates, on Sunday evening at the Waldorf on the occasion of Mrs. Gates' birthday. Fifty sprays of oncidium and 200 cattleyas were used in the table decoration. You can imagine the cost, but Mr. Gates thinks nothing of twisting the Wall street tiger's tail for a $10,000 turn any day, so "what's the diff?" No wonder the leading retail florists of New York deliver the goods in their own automobiles. This city is growing fast and millionaires are everywhere. We pass them every hour and we cannot tell them from the wholesale florists.

Dr. Britton and wife, who have been away from the city and in Bermuda for several weeks, return to the Botanical Gardens this week and the head gardener, Mr. Nash, is back from Hayti with trophies of his floricultural investigations.

The auction season opened auspiciously last week and looks very promising, judging by the crowds in attendance and the excellent prices realized.

Mr. Bonnot, of the Cut Flower Exchange, says everything indicates a great year on his floor and the carnation growers grow in numbers every day.

G. C. Schrader, of Elmhurst, L. I., met with a severe accident Saturday. While on his way to the great auto race in his own automobile, a gasoline explosion wrecked his machine and badly burned and blistered his face, but fortunately his eyes were saved.

The Johnston Heating Co., of Jersey City, report an encouraging and rapidly increasing business. They are supplying the heating for the Exotic Nursery at Secaucus, N. J., the Kellogg greenhouses at Astoria and the Hinode Florist Co., at Whitestone, L. I.

Reed & Keller say that it is still Christmas with them and they cannot catch up to the demand for their novelties.

Owen McDonald, on Madison avenue, is bankrupt, liabilities over $6,000 and assets about $500. The principal creditors are the Federal bank and Schultheis.

A new retail store has been opened at the corner of Fifty-seventh street and Lexington avenue, to be known as Jacque's, Inc. It is capitalized at $10,000 and it is said Henry Siegel, formerly of Chicago, is interested in the venture.

A. L. Young & Co. are receiving some fine carnations, Enchantress and White Lawson from Messrs. Hengstenberg and Alfred Funke, of Hempstead, L. I., and roses from Mr. Dickhut, of Chatham, N. J.

The new ice-box, lately installed by James McManus, evidently is none too early and none too large for the orchid supply he keeps on hand for his growing clientele. The supply of white orchids is equal to any demand and the call for them comes from every direction. A great shipping trade this winter is anticipated. Mr. McManus has made his place evidently the "headquarters for orchids in America."

The engagement is announced of Alfred Futterman, of Gunther's staff, to Miss Gussie Miller, of New York.

C. W. Ward and family are visiting in California and will not return before November.

The Institute Show.

Last Wednesday and Thursday the American Institute's seventy-fourth fall exhibition took place at the Berkeley Lyceum. It was a great success. The attendance was large and the exhibits superb. Dahlias were most in evidence, though there was also an abundance of fruit and flowers and decorative plants. A vase of Victory was staged by Guttman & Weber and greatly admired. Quantities of this superb novelty now reach the New York market daily. J. T. Lovett's exhibit carried off several first prizes. Mr. Lovett's son and general manager was in charge of the exhibit.

Bobbink & Atkins had a large collection of herbaceous stock. John Lewis Childs exhibited tuberous rooted begonias, tritomas and gladioli. C. H. Totty, of Madison, exhibited the Richmond rose, concerning which he is very enthusiastic. Julius Roehrs Co. had the usual display of orchids and decorative plants and A. J. Manda, of Brooklyn, with Mrs. Pratt, made his bow to New York in one of the best collections of stove plants ever exhibited at an Institute show. H. F. Burt, Taunton, Mass.; W. P. Lothrop, East Bridgewater, Mass.; Geo. Hale and James Dowlan, of Seabright, N. J., and A. L. Miller, of Brooklyn, where the New York Florists' Club will visit this week, were the principal dahlia exhibitors. Other exhibitors were the F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown; J. P. Sorenson, Stamford, Conn.; Wm. Hastings, Tuxedo; Wm. Robertson, Oakland, N. J.; J. C. Williams, Montclair, N. J., and J. W. Van Ostrand, Bardonia, N. Y.

Bonora was on exhibition. Many of the gardeners in the vicinity of New York are using it and speak highly of what it has accomplished.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

No change in the bean situation is reported. The weather is favorable and harvesting is progressing in good shape.

THE Texas Seed and Floral Co., Dallas, Texas, will erect a four-story brick building at 311 and 313 Pacific avenue, to cost $14,465.

Good weather is reported from Nebraska, with the added information that it is aiding the vine seed and sweet corn crops very much.

SEVERAL California shipments have been received at Chicago the past week. The invoices cover onion seed, sweet peas, celery, etc. The samples look good.

A SHORT crop of onions and a short crop of onion seed is a combination of circumstances that ought to satisfy the seedsmen who have been carrying too much onion seed.

A REPORT from Washington Island, Wis., says the potato crop is going to turn out a poor one, possibly one-third of a crop or less, caused by a disease in the tubers, a good many rotting in the ground.

THE shortage of the pea crop is becoming well understood. Every delivery from the regular growers at the different stations proves it and the situation does not seem to be confined to any one or two varieties, but covers all of them, both of wrinkled and round sorts.

WM. HENRY MAULE, Philadelphia, has been in the seed business twenty-eight years and says he has spent over a million dollars in newspaper and catalogue advertising. He says that the high advertising rate general publications do not pay, but that the gardening and agricultural papers do. Still he thinks the catalogue the mainstay of every successful seed business in this country.

THE seed business in the south is developing rapidly, particularly at New Orleans.

VISITED CHICAGO:—Watson S. Woodruff, of S. D. Woodruff & Sons, Orange, Conn.; Henry Flaspoller, representing Jos. Schindler & Co., New Orleans, La.; James Barrett, representing Jos. Steckler Seed Co., New Orleans, La.

THE following clipping from a local paper is a good indication of the scarcity of the pea crop in Door county, Wisconsin: "We are in the market for all varieties of peas. Prices right. Terms cash. Call at our new warehouse, foot of Portage street. The John H. Allan Seed Co."

EUGENE SCHAEFFEL, representing Vilmorin-Andrieux & Co., Paris, France, after an absence of five years, will arrive in New York, on S. S. La Lorraine, about September 30, for a tour of the seed trade. His address, while in this country, will be care of Aug. Rhotert, 26 Barclay street, New York.

FRENCH SEED CROPS.

Hasslach & Roumanille send out the following notes on the condition of seed crops in the south of France about September 5:

Artichoke and asparagus, condition fair. Beet and mangold, partly destroyed by cold, now attacked by insects; poor crops. Cauliflower, broccoli, are in a fair state and will ripen soon. Cabbage and savoy have suffered much and are now attacked by insects; in every case the crop will be insignificant. Carrots have suffered by cold and continuous rain in May; crop not very important, caterpillars are attacking the umbels, thus spoiling the greater part of the crop; we cannot yet give any idea as to the probable crop. Celery, celeriac, nearly an entire failure. Chicory, endive, are secured and will give a satisfactory crop. Cucumber, large areas are in growth, more than last spring; a very satisfactory business was done and all stock sold out in the town of Saint-Remy; crop very small. Kohl rabi, fully fifty per cent destroyed. Leek, plantations are of little importance; prices will be high. Lettuces, large areas planted, promise well both in quality and quantity. Onion, red and white sorts, rather good; yellow sorts less abundant, prices probably high. Pumpkin, vegetable marrow, blooming too late, will render no fruits. Radishes, small areas planted, and suffered by cold; crop presumed insignificant. Spinach, average crop. Tomato, rather good prices, higher than usual.

Two Sides of the Business Card of The Gilbreath Seed Co., Dealers in Clover Seeds.

In flower seeds, harvest benefited by warm days at the end of June of: Belis perennis, Centaurea candidissima, Cineraria maritima, Centaurea gymnocarpa, myosotis, sweet william, Viola tricolor maxima. Further good prospects of the following: Aster, balsam, cacalia, cypress vine, datura, dianthus, gaillardia, helianthus, hollyhock, humulus, ipomœa, linum, marigold, nicotiana, perilla, petunia, phlox, portulaca, salpiglossis, sweet peas, verbena, zinnia.

STURGEON BAY, WIS.

The weather is still warm and is accompanied by an overabundance of rain. Potatoes show signs of blight or rot in some fields. The yield will be heavy.

Arthur Teweles, of the firm of Teweles & Brandeis, reports that grain is coming in very slow, and that they do not look for a heavy movement before the first of October, about four weeks later than last year. The recent, heavy rains have delayed the work of the farmers, making the harvest season a late one.

Showers during the first of the week gave the farmers another setback. The crops are being harvested under great difficulties this season.

CATALOGUES RECEIVED.

W. E. Marshall & Co., New York, select list of bulbs, trees and shrubs for fall planting; Young & Halstead, Troy, N. Y., fall catalogue of bulbs, seeds, plants and requisites; Benjamin Hammond, Fishkill-on-Hudson, N. Y., paints, oils, putty, insecticides; Wood Bros., Fishkill, N. Y., trade list of plants and cuttings; Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, O., bulbs, plants and seeds for autumn; Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester, N. Y., fall list of lilacs, peonies, phloxes, roses, etc.

ONION SETS.

What kind of soil is best for onion sets? How much seed is required per acre and about what is the average yield?

Please give me the names of wholesale seedsmen who buy vegetable seeds and onion sets.

A. B. COWAN.

Mt. Vernon, Ia.

Any good soil is suitable for onion sets. It must have sufficient body to mature the crop quickly. Well drained clay soil produces the firmest bulb, though sandy loam would probably produce the larger crop. Weedy land should never be planted to onion sets; neither should they be planted where there is a scarcity of available field laborers; a week of neglect when weeding is needed spoils any chance of success with this crop. Rich land stands heavier seeding than poorer land. Sixty-five to eighty-five pounds of seed to the acre is about the right quantity to sow. A fairly good yield would be 400 bushels per acre. See the advertising columns for the rest of the query.

HARRISBURG, PA.

The H. L. Holmes Seed Co. has been making a display of dahlias, comprising flowers of over 150 different varieties. They were all staged the same as at a regular horticultural exhibition, with the names of each variety attached. The Holmes Seed Co. has, for the past three years, been making an exhibit of this kind at the seed store for the benefit of its patrons around about Harrisburg, who really do not know the true value of the dahlia.

At the opening of the show there was an attendance of at least 1,500 people, and great were the exclamations of admiration of many when they saw the numerous varieties. An arch of dahlias created quite a sensation among those entering the store. In all, there were possibly from 5,000 to 6,000 blooms on exhibition, which were replaced daily with fresh flowers for three days, during which time the show was held. The flowers were supplied by the L. K. Peacock Co., of Atco, N. J. This is one of the features which the Holmes Seed Co. use in attracting people to their store, and Mr. Holmes says it might be valuable to many other seedsmen, for even if they do not wish to purchase anything, the visitors see what you have to sell, and, although not a paying investment by any means, directly, it is one of the best advertising schemes he knows of.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

We have had a week of grand weather and it has been much more pleasant outdoors than indoors, which is all very well in its way, but it does not help the cut flower business. There are lots of good roses and carnations, and they are becoming more plentiful. Asters have just about dropped out of sight.

The first yellow chrysanthemums of the season made their appearance at the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.'s, Saturday, September 23.

Various Notes.

Tuesday, October 2, will be the next meeting of the Florists' Club and President Langhans is arranging for an interesting display of cut flower work as done thirty years ago by an old-timer and also some up-to-date bunches. There will also be a display of decorative greenhouse plants, with an interesting talk on same. President Langhans wishes to invite all members to this meeting.

Breitenstein & Flemm are changing their interior decorations and, as they are always original, we expect something out of the regular line.

A Pittsburg firm is making window boxes and plant tubs out of iron and cement, inlaying them with colored glass in mosaic effect. Some of the florists are already filling them with box-wood and arbor-vitæ for porch and window effects for the winter; they are very pretty.

Ed. McCollum, of the Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, is blossoming out as a football player. He gave a corn roast last Friday night, which was a success and was enjoyed by all who had the pleasure to attend. Hoo-Hoo.

ST. PAUL, MINN.—H. C. Hanson will build a thousand-dollar greenhouse on Dale street.

MCKINNEY, TEX.—George W. Taylor has this season put up two new connected houses, each 14x75 feet.

CHESWICK, PA.—Innes & McRae will this winter devote six houses to lettuce and parsley, three houses to carnations and one to smilax.

The Market.

There was an unusual demand for high grade flowers during the last week of September. Store openings created quite a demand for palms, etc. Two bank openings, one of especial importance, the Central National, in the New Rockefeller building, brought a heavy demand for Beauties, mums, orchids, etc. A very large business was also done in funeral work, the death of Luther Allen, one of Cleveland's most prominent business men being the occasion. Several wedding decorations were executed this week. What is needed most at this time is a killing frost to finish outdoor flowers; then the real fall season will open. At the present writing the weather conditions are ideal for the growth of indoor stock, warm and balmy during the day and cool enough at night for a little fire heat. The improvement of stock is quite noticeable.

The first mums of the season have made their appearance, the variety being Monrovia. Some very fine Beauties are coming in, of extra good color and strong stems.

Various Notes.

Smith & Fetters have had an exceptionally heavy week for the wind-up of September, a very large decoration for the bankers' convention, including some thirty odd tables, many large orders for the bank openings, also for the funeral of Luther Allen. This, coupled with two large weddings, made a busy week. Mr. Smith says he is very well pleased with the outlook for business, September being especially satisfactory.

The J. M. Gasser Co. also reports a good demand for flowers. Particularly is this true of Beauties. This firm was also very busy with large orders for the bank openings, and some big orders for the Luther Allen funeral. They report business as being quite up to their expectations. Stock coming from the Rocky River plant is very good for so early in the season. Beauties and Kaisers are extra fine.

C. M. Wagner is well satisfied with the condition of business, having several weddings for the near future. He is receiving some very good carnations from Merkle & Son, of West Mentor.

H. B. Jones has returned from a long cruise up the lakes and is the very picture of health.

F. M. Smith recently returned from Chicago, where he was looking up stock for the coming season. He reports everything looking splendid around that locality.

At the regular meeting of the Cleveland Florists' Club held September 25, the following officers were unanimously elected for the ensuing year: President, M. Bloy; first vice-president, A. Hart; second vice-president, Guy Bate; secretary, Isaac Kennedy; assistant secretary, Wm. Brinker; treasurer, H. A. Hart. After business was transacted and the meeting adjourned refreshments were served by the executive committee. R. Emsley was elected to membership.

MUSHROOMS.

Temperature and Moisture.

The best temperature for a mushroom house is 55 degrees. Some growers run their houses a little higher than this but by so doing are apt to have the atmosphere too dry. As atmosphere moisture is one of the essentials to success it is safer to run the temperature a little lower than the crop would actually stand rather than run the risk of having the atmosphere too dry, even although growth may be a little slower at 55 degrees than it would be at 60 degrees.

The amount of sprinkling necessary to maintain a humid atmosphere will depend a great deal on where the mushrooms are grown. If in an underground cellar evaporation would be slow and the temperature would be easily kept up without having the pipes very hot, so here sprinkling would not have to be done so frequently as if the house were over ground and a brisk heat necessary to keep up the desired temperature. When sprinkling is done, water about the same temperature as the atmosphere of the house should be used and a fine syringe is best for applying it. In a house that is naturally moist it may only be necessary to occasionally dampen the pathways, but in the case of a house where the atmosphere is naturally dry the side walls should also be sprinkled.

If the material is in the proper condition of moisture at the time of making up the bed, and the proper atmospheric moisture is maintained in the house, watering should be unnecessary, but if from some unavoidable cause the bed becomes dry the only way to save the crop would be to water the bed. The temperature of the bed should be ascertained and water a few degrees warmer applied. It will not be necessary to soak the bed until the water runs through, as would be done with a rose or carnation bed, but just enough should be applied to moisten the material.

The exact size at which mushrooms should be pulled will depend upon the quality of the crop. In the case of a good, free growth they attain quite a large size before they reach what might be called the too old stage, or the stage at which the gills turn black. When left until that time both the quality and appearance of the mushrooms are impaired. If, on the other hand, they are pulled too early the grower loses in weight. Experience soon teaches the operator just how long they can safely be left to attain the greatest weight and at the same time look well and be of good quality.

The mushrooms should be pulled, not cut, and to avoid pulling a bunch of the soil along with them and leaving a large hole in the bed, they should be twisted around, taking hold of the stem as near the soil as possible. This twist breaks them free and allows them to be lifted out clean, leaving a hole only the size of the stem. W. S. CROYDON.

PACIFIC COAST.

PROTECTION FROM FROST.

The growing season for small ornamental evergreens and shrubs is still at its height and, as we can expect colder weather before long, it is a good plan to examine them and see what had better be shifted, either in glass frames or in the houses. Our winters are very uncertain when it comes to figuring out how much cold weather we may expect. Many of our shrubs and trees are not hardy when small, but when they have attained a few years' growth no worryment need be felt. In the vicinity of San Francisco for the past two seasons the thermometer has rarely fallen below 28 degrees, but even this temperature is quite sufficient to destroy much stock.

With coniferous stock in the varieties handled by a majority of the growers and dealers, there is little to be particular about, except araucarias. At no stage is there any difficulty with A. imbricata. It is hardy. With A. Bidwillii, A. excelsa, A. Cunninghami and A. Cookii, there is always a chance that they will get bitten and shelter should be provided for them until they have been growing in the ground at least four or five years. I have seen them badly burned, even when much older, but only in extreme seasons.

With palms all the sorts of phoenix and chamærops are hardy and no frost in this latitude seems to bother them. Kentias, seaforthias, arecas and livistonas are easily handled outside from April until the end of October; after that they must be watched. None of these require any artificial heat, even in the coldest part of the winter, but they must be under glass, either in cold frames or greenhouses; they never become hardy enough to withstand our winters in the neighborhood of San Francisco, although in the southern portion of the state they can be handled with impunity.

Asparagus plumosus, Sprengeri or tenuissimus is hardy here and can be left outside all winter, provided there is not too much moisture. All the varieties do well under latticework and plumosus can be handled as easily as smilax and with as little trouble.

With ferns we have to be more particular. None of the *adiantum*s commonly grown should be handled outside except A. pedatum and this does not succeed except in a shady place. All the *aspidium*s are hardy except a few delicate kinds not safe to leave in the open. I have seen dicksonias badly cut with the frost but have never lost any. D. punctilobula is especially hardy. Asplenium bulbiferum is half hardy and A. Trichomanes fully so. Woodwardias are very hardy here. There are many other ferns handled but these I mention are in general use. Cyrtomium falcatum should not be forgotten, as it is one of our most valuable hardy sorts. The various kinds of pteris and nephrolepis, although they will stand considerable cold weather, are not suitable for outside growing unless in a specially warm and dry situation.

Returning to palms, I might add that Cycas revoluta is not affected by frost here, nor is Corypha Australis usually.

Care must be taken with small plants of bougainvillea, jasmine, lantana, mandevilla and bignonia until the second season. With flowering plants, unless the season turns especially cold, large geraniums, heliotropes and marguerites, when planted in the ground, are safe, but small plants in pots should be housed. Achyranthes, alternantheras, salvias, lobelias and material of that description, when in a sheltered place will not be killed, but if there is too much moisture they will hardly survive. It is the superabundance of water in the winter time that destroys more of our small plants than does the cold nights. G.

PASADENA, CAL.

Albert Zimmerman, who has been superintendent of the Pasadena city parks for the past three years, having resigned the position, the commissioners have appointed Jacob Albrecht to succeed him.

The Park Nursery Co. has just moved its office and salesyard from 158 West Colorado street, where they have been located for the past sixteen years, to 190 West Colorado street. They have also removed a portion of their lath house and greenhouses to the rear of the property at the new address. The balance of the houses are to be taken to the nursery one mile east of Pasadena.

The Pasadena Gardeners' Association is flourishing and holds meetings the first and third Friday evenings of each month in G. A. R. hall.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

The weather has turned very warm and San Franciscans are having their first spell of summer. Flowers of almost all kinds are very scarce, carnations and roses because of the changing of stock, and other material principally because it is between seasons. Asters are gone and chrysanthemums are not yet in full blast. Lilium album and rubrum are almost out of season, longiflorums are scarce and auratums have entirely disappeared. Valley is in good supply at $4 per hundred. Sweet peas are, owing to the warm weather, more plentiful again, although the stems are generally very short. Smilax is getting longer of string, and asparagus and maidenhair hold their own.

Gladioli, dahlias and other cheap flowers are almost out of market. Everyone is waiting patiently for mums to get cheap.

Business outside of funeral work is very slow, although the wholesalers are having no trouble to dispose of everything they have.

Various Notes.

W. W. Saunders, the Fresno bulb grower, is in town. Mr. Saunders will remove his entire stock from Golden Gate to Fresno.

Thomas Shickler, employed for many years as gardener to Mrs. Stanford, at Palo Alto, committed suicide at Covelo September 18. He was a native of Austria and 42 years of age.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

H. C. ROGERS, Mechanicsburg, O., has started a catalpa nursery.

THE Horticultural Society of Northern Illinois will hold its thirty-ninth annual meeting at Harvard December 7 and 8.

THE European nurserymen, especially in France and Holland, are finding the American market a most satisfactory outlet for their product.

WESTERN New York nurserymen all report this as having been the best growing season they have had in years. Good stock is plentiful in most lines.

IMPORTATIONS of French crab seed now amount to many tons a year and nearly all of it finds its way into the ground in the vicinity of Topeka, Kan.

WHOLESALE nurseries are holding prices stiffer than a year ago, due more to a belief in the general prosperity of the country than to any apparent shortage in stock.

A SCHOOL of forestry is conducted at Biltmore, N. C., C. A. Schenck, director, who advertises as one of the advantages "object lessons within the estate of George W. Vanderbilt."

F. GOMER WATERER, of John Waterer & Sons, the American Nursery, Bagshot, Surrey, England, will visit eastern nurseries during October, making his headquarters at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, New York.

DOES your catalogue show that it was turned out of the same mold as were those of a half dozen of your competitors?

THERE is some complaint that cherry trees have not done so well as most nursery stock this season, due to too much rain in the early stages, which is said to have caused too early falling of the leaves and growth below the normal.

A GOOD lawn shrub which is not used as much as it deserves is the high-bush cranberry, Viburnum opulus. It flowers attractively in the latter part of May or June and in the fall is full of bright red berries, which hang on for a long time.

THERE are those who say they believe the nursery trade is on the way to the "demnition bow-wows" because of the nature of modern competition. It is undoubtedly true that "times do change" and that those venerable firms which for business depend on the prestige of by-gone days may be suffering from the inroads of younger and more enterprising men. It is so in every line. The ability to meet changing conditions is as essential to retaining the fruits of success as sound business methods were to its attainment.

POMOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

There was an attendance of over 200 members at the twenty-ninth biennial convention of the American Pomological Society, held at the Coates House, Kansas City, September 19 to 21. A large portion of those present were connected with horticultural schools, etc., but there were also many fruit growers and a number of nurserymen. C. L. Watrous, Des Moines, Ia., presided in the absence of President J. H. Hale, of South Glastonbury, Conn. There was a lengthy program of papers on scientific pomology and many debates on more work-a-day topics, mention of the Ben Davis apple occasioning some of the liveliest exchanges of personal opinion, publishable and otherwise.

There was an exceptionally large display of fruits. The Wilder medals were awarded as follows: Silver medal to the Missouri State Horticultural Society for its exhibit of apples, pears and plums; silver medal to Ellwanger & Barry, Rochester, N. Y., for display of 127 plates of pears; silver medal to C. G. Patten, Charles City, Ia., for forty-five plates of fruit originated by cross breeding; bronze medals to Stark Bros., Louisiana, Mo.; Fabian Garcia, Messila Park, N. M.; C. E. Bassett, Finneyville, Mich.; honorable mention to Ozark Orchard Company, Goodman, Mo.; A. T. Lebanon, Lebanon, Mo.; Kansas Agricultural College, J. L. Williams, Kansas City, Mo.; E. A. Riehl, Alton, Ill.

Officers were elected as follows: President, L. A. Goodman, Kansas City; vice-president, T. V. Munson, Denison, Tex.; secretary, John Craig, Ithaca, N. Y.; treasurer, L. R. Taft, Agricultural College, Mich.

Following the convention sixty-two of the members left on a four days' tour of the Ozark fruit belt as guests of the Kansas City Southern and Frisco railroads.

CEMETERY CONVENTION.

The nineteenth annual convention of the American Association of Cemetery Superintendents, held at Washington, D. C., September 19 to 22, was the most successful in the history of the organization. The attendance was 160, from all parts of the United States. There was a program of valuable papers and discussions on technical and landscape topics, sessions being held at the local cemeteries. Officers were elected as follows: President, E. G. Carter, Oakwoods, Chicago; vice-president, J. C. Kline, Woodlawn, Dayton, Ohio; secretary-treasurer, Bellett Lawson, Paxtang, Pa. It was decided to meet at Detroit next year. The social features were especially numerous, including a trip to Mt. Vernon and much sight-seeing. On the closing day a large party accepted an invitation to visit the cemeteries of Baltimore.

BABY RAMBLER FINE BEDDER.

The Baby Rambler rose has been seen in the market throughout the season and quite recently I saw some well flowered plants in pots, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser. It may not sustain very high prices, yet it will undoubtedly remain a favorite, and take its place among the most useful of market plants. It is not only as a pot plant that it is useful; for bedding it is one of the most continuous bloomers we have. I recently saw a large bed in the open ground at H. B. May's, where it was flowering most profusely, and was told that it had been equally gay for many weeks past. No sooner has one crop of bloom passed than it is succeeded by another, which is produced from new shoots thrown up from the base. It cannot be too highly recommended as a bedding rose.

from another without crowding anything. Of course there are such things as cannas, phlox, ricinus, geraniums, coleus, achyranthes, scarlet salvia, zinnias, and a lot of other good things, used just in the right places, producing effects one never thought possible with such plants.

Among the trees used most effectively are the pin oak, Norway maple, elm, oriental plane, birch and ash, the flowering apples, cherries, peaches, and shrubbery of all kinds. In many places one can stand and look between the trees and shrubbery and 300 feet below see the railroad, factories and various industries of our great manufacturing city and one cannot help admiring the man with his art who can make such a transformation up among the smoke clouds of our Smoky City.

Wm. Forsythe, who took charge of the bald knob eight years ago, and has made it one of the beauty spots of our city, is too modest to boast about what he has done, but rather apologizes for what he might have done. Gardeners who are playing among nice easy things would do well to go up there and see what is possible among the rocks and stiff red clay. Hoo-Hoo.

INCARVILLEA GRANDIFLORA.

This plant may be regarded as one of the best introductions in the line of hardy perennials of the last years, for which we are indebted, if I am not mistaken, to a French missionary in North China. Compared with the now fairly well-known I. Delavayi, it has the following advantages: Enormous flowers of about double the size of I. Delavayi, beating in size even a good gloxinia flower. The growth is compact and the flowering season is about the middle of May. Although the price of the tubers, which was only a couple of years ago, still some $3 to $4 each, is coming more in the reach of growers, it is likely that it will keep up a fair price. As regards hardiness, it stands in its native country a good deal of frost and can be considered to be hardy, still it is safe to give the tubers a protection of leaf-mold during winter. A. M. C. VAN DER ELST.

FLOWERING SHRUBS.

Will you inform me what flowering shrubs can be planted to make a good showing in the place of cannas and salvias? The bed is thirteen feet in diameter and situated so as to get the sun about half of the day, also where it is cold and bleak in winter. I have plenty of hydrangeas and spiræas in the yard. E. F. C.

There are so many beautiful and desirable shrubs suitable for the purposes named and which are reliably winter hardy that it is a little difficult to make a selection. If something is desired which will make a rapid growth and cover the space to be planted we would recommend any of the loniceras, of which L. Morrowi is perhaps the best. Plant four feet apart each way. Given good soil to grow in, a single bush will cover a bed of the diameter named in five years. This lonicera attains a height of eight to nine feet, is beautiful either in bloom or fruit and holds its foliage longer than almost any other deciduous shrub.

If a little more variety is desired, nothing could be better than lilacs. They grow slower than loniceras, but are magnificent when in bloom and hold their foliage very late. Several varieties might be planted in such a bed. We would suggest one plant each of the following, which would give quite a long succession of bloom: Charles X, reddish purple; Frau Bertha Dammann, large single white; Marie Legraye, creamy white, immense trusses; Souv. de Ludwig Späth, single reddish purple; Ville de Troyes, single dark purple; President Grevy, blue lilac, immense trusses; Rothamagensis, violet blue; villosa, light purple, very late flowering. The foregoing would make a pretty bed. In a few years one or two removals would be needed, but lilacs are not difficult to move. Some annuals could be grown among the lilacs for a year or two to cover the surface. W. N. CRAIG.

DETROIT.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club was held September 20. A committee was appointed to arrange for an exhibition of cement slabs and posts to be held at the Michigan Cut Flower Exchange October 4. A number of premiums will be offered as inducements. The question of "boarder" plants was brought up again. Some thought it a good plan to refuse boarders altogether but the majority thought it better to charge a good price per month, as in that way many poor plants would find their way to the junk pile. There was some talk of starting another bowling club.

The Market.

Good stock continues to be scarce, except roses, which are very short in stem. Business has been fair this week, the sale of palms and Boston ferns starting up again.

Hugo Schroeter has been in Chicago this week buying Beauties and other roses for a large store decoration put up on Wednesday.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Trade has been very good for this season of the year and stock in fair supply. Quality is up to the usual standard for September. Prospects are very bright and every one expects a busy season, fairly opening with our fall show, which is expected to be the best ever held by the Kentucky Society of Florists.

The retailers all show the effects of steadily improving demand for flowers in improved facilities for handling the trade. Walker's new store is a fine one and Jacob Schulz is building a new store which will be second to none in this part of the country. Nanz & Neuner are forced to vacate the store they have occupied so many years and will see to it that they have every modern convenience when they get located again. Baumer and Haupt each do a nice business and have good stores.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—Work has been started on the new greenhouses at the university.

NEW PHILADELPHIA, O.—T. B. Stroup has a house of Ivory roses with which he is especially successful.

CENTRALIA, ILL.—J. W. Ross has his annual dahlia show on this week. He has ninety-three varieties of dahlias on his place and when the season is at its height the display each year attracts many visitors.

ABUNDANCE The Phenomenal Yielder

A carnation that stands alone for blooming, as a glance at the above photo will show. No other sort can compare with it. Blooming profusely from fall until thrown out in summer. Color, pure white, a good size, well built flower of the shape of Scott. Stems in fall 14 to 16 inches, stretching to 2, 2 1/4 and 3 feet in winter and spring, very stiff, without being rigid. Is a fine keeper and shipper, flowers sent to Cuba last year kept in perfect condition a week after arrival. Plant has the slim, wiry growth of McGowan in fall but loses this character as winter and spring advance, as it makes a rapid, strong and vigorous growth. It makes a large bunch of fibrous roots, which accounts for its wonderful recuperative power, and makes it extremely easy to handle: it can be transplanted with perfect safety, plants standing up like soldiers in a couple of days after planting. It makes absolutely no grass at base of plants for every shoot runs quickly up to flower. A thoroughly business Carnation. Is a profuse propagator and a sure and easy rooter. Has never been subject to any disease. There is nothing in the way of a Carnation easier to grow, but beware of overfeeding, as it won't stand it: flowers will burst if fed highly; 8 parts of well-rotted sod or rich loam, with 1 part well-rotted manure is all it requires, no other dressing. This is a Carnation that returns dollars for cents to the grower, for while he grows Abundance he will always get an abundance.

Orders taken now for cuttings, so send in your order early as they are filled in strict rotation.

Price for well-rooted Cuttings, $10.00 per 100; $75.00 per 1000; 500 at 1000 rate. To those wishing unrooted cuttings will be given 25 extra with each 100. Rooted cuttings as soon as possible; unrooted cuttings after Nov. 1. Cash before delivery.

The Market.

Business is not picking up quite as rapidly as might be expected or hoped; still it could be worse and there is a fair trade being done. Funeral work is the main item. Though many of the best flower buyers are now at home they do not seem to take hold; perhaps the weather is too fine.

The first mums of the season were seen the past week. They were white and yellow. The white were small but the yellow were fairly good. They had been picked a little too soon, though, and did not possess very good keeping qualities.

Roses are almost a glut and all varieties sell cheap. Beauty holds out the best of any and brings the best price in proportion. Other red roses also are in good demand. Carnations sell quickly and at good prices. Some very good ones are seen and they sell out clean. There is an especially heavy demand for white. Reds are scarce. Other stock is about the same as last report but greens are a little scarce.

Various Notes.

Charles Hoffmeister has rented the store lately occupied by the Hoffmeister Floral Co. and has bought the fixtures and is doing business as the Chas. Hoffmeister Floral Co. The store is located at 813 Elm street. Miss Schramm, formerly with the Hoffmeister Floral Co., will be with the new concern.

The Charleston Cut Flower and Plant Co., of Charleston, W. Va., was visited by a fire which caused almost a total loss, and which was insured for about half value.

Wm. Murphy has returned from the north after a long vacation.

THE REVIEW is very satisfactory to me. Being a retail florist I very much appreciate the matter pertaining to our branch of the business and feel that I would not like to do without it. — THOS. A. IVEY, Brantford, Ont.

Our stock is grown from the best selected European strain, which has given satisfaction wherever grown. Fine plants, from 2½-inch pots, ready for immediate shift, in white, clear light pink, blue and bright scarlet, $3.00 per 100.

Field-Grown Asparagus Sprengeri

Those who have purchased our field-grown plants in the past are convinced that they are much superior to pot-grown, both for pots and bench culture.

When housed they immediately start into active growth, throwing up numerous growths, which come to perfection much earlier than those from pots. Field culture adds to the vigor of the plants and an enormous crop of green is the result.

IN TEXAS.

I have two houses 14x75 feet, with no partition wall. The outside walls are five feet high, with a foot of glass, so that the total glass area is 2,550 square feet, not counting the glass in the south gables, above three feet. Could I get sufficient heat by using a 2-inch pipe on each outside wall, with four 1 1/4-inch returns in each house? Our lowest temperature in seven years has been 5 degrees below zero. What size of boiler will be required? G. W. T.

You can heat these houses by running a 2-inch supply, either along the exposed side of each or under the ridge, and returning same through eight 1 1/4-inch pipes in each house. The entire piping would consist of a 2-inch flow in each house and eight 1 1/4-inch returns, or sixteen 1 1/4-inch pipes in all. It will be desirable to place valves on at least three of the 1 1/4-inch pipes in each house, these pipes to be reserved for severe weather. Under ordinary circumstances four or five 1 1/4-inch returns will probably be sufficient in your climate. The boiler should have a rated capacity for 1,000 square feet of radiation. It would not be wise to secure a boiler with less capacity. Any standard make of heater with the rated capacity above noted will do your work. L. C. C.

GRADE OF FLOW PIPE.

I am changing a boiler in my greenhouse and it is very much longer than the one I am taking out. The flow pipe is eighteen inches higher than the line of the flow that is already in the house. I am in doubt whether to drop the flow eighteen inches by tees and elbow to begin level or let the fall be gradual through the length of the house until it strikes the returns at the other end. Please give me your opinion. F. A. B.

If, as seems to be the case, you are using a down-hill system in the arrangement of your flow and return pipes, I should by all means change the grade of the flow so as to make it gradual the full length of the house. Tees and ells have a tendency to retard the circulation and the fewer you use the better. L. C. C.

from Belgium. These everlasting green foliaged pot plants are growing more in favor by the tasteful plant buyers of this land from year to year. Please watch the growth of our importation during the last 10 years: first year 100, second 250; third 500, fourth 1000, fifth 2,000. This year (1905) which is the 10th anniversary of our first importation, our spring importation amounted to 5,000. All these are grown for us under contract by an Araucaria specialist in Belgium. I must say for the benefit of my customers that they were never before so nice and large for the money as this year. I herewith quote you special prices on these, in or out of: Each 5 1/4-in. pots, 10 to 12 in. high, 2 yrs. old, 3 tiers, $0.50 5 1/2-in. pots, 13 to 15 in. high, 3 to 4 tiers, .60 6-in. pots, 16 to 18 in. high, 3 to 4 tiers, .75 6 1/4-in. pots, 18 to 20 in. high, 4 to 5 tiers, 1.00 6 1/2-in. pots, 20 to 24 in. high, 5 to 6 tiers, 1.25

A VALUABLE BEGONIA.

Begonia semperflorens gigantea carminata, though decidedly handicapped by such a cumbersome name, is a very desirable one, and for flowering from early spring onwards, it is very useful, and particularly valuable for the embellishment of the greenhouse and conservatory. It is by no means a novelty, having been introduced some years ago, and, although for some time very popular, it was gradually dropping out of cultivation till two or three years since, when somewhat of a revival in its favor set in. We are indebted for this variety to M. Lemoine, who obtained it by inter-crossing the well-known Begonia semperflorens with B. Lyncheana, which, when first introduced from Mexico, a little over twenty years ago, was known as B. Roezli. This was a tall-growing species that naturally formed what is termed a leggy plant, for, even if pinched when young, branches were produced but sparingly. The clusters of flowers were, however, very bright, and by inter-crossing with B. semperflorens this gigantea section originated. It is of bold, free growth, with handsome leafage, while the flowers, borne in large clusters well overtopping the foliage, are of a bright carmine rose tint, and the flower stems are also colored. If stopped once or twice this begonia forms a good, moderately bushy specimen, but this pinching must not be carried to excess, as the broad clusters of blossoms are seen at their best on stout, vigorous shoots. Given a few large established plants they will flower more or less throughout the greater part of the year. They should, to maintain them in a progressive state, receive weak liquid manure occasionally.—Gardeners' Magazine.

INCARVILLEA DELAVAYI.

Hardy herbaceous plants received a valuable addition to their numbers by the introduction of Incarvillea Delavayi a few years ago. The leaves are all radical, from twelve to eighteen inches long and pinnatifid. The flower spikes rise to a height of from two feet to two and a half feet, and produce about a dozen rose-colored, gloxinia-like blooms, two and a half inches in diameter near the top, and that expand in May and June. Well established plants throw up several spikes of bloom annually. The flowers, cut in the spike, stand well indoors, and are useful for filling fairly large vases. It is evidently not partial to any soil, but the best plants I have seen were growing in a porous, sandy loam. A too rich, or a very poor soil, should not be employed for its cultivation, as the former fosters rank succulent growth, rendering the plant less able to withstand the rigors of some of our severe winters in the more exposed and colder localities. A poor soil on the other hand will only enable the plant to exist. Incarvillea Delavayi is an excellent subject for massing in the herbaceous border, as its bright rose-colored flowers stand well above the foliage, and give a telling effect, even from a distance. This Incarvillea should be included in every collection of hardy plants, be the collection ever so small, and, especially, if the finer things are desired.—Gardeners' Magazine.

PIPING.

We have three connected houses $12\frac{1}{2} \times 76$ feet, east and west; ridges eight feet, side walls and gutters six feet, glass in east end above three feet; south side covered by a lean-to with five feet of glass. We also have a detached house 8×37 , nine feet to ridge and six feet to plates. We wish to heat with hot water, using $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch and 2-inch pipe. The temperature required in the three houses is 55 degrees and in the lean-to 60 degrees when it is 15 degrees below zero outside. How much piping is required?

How many feet of $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch pipe would be required to construct a coil boiler to heat these houses? B. & S.

The three houses $12\frac{1}{2} \times 76$ feet, together with the south lean-to compartment, can be heated by using four 2-inch risers to supply four coils of $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch pipe; each containing nine pipes; i. e., thirty-six $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch pipes in the entire range. It would be well to run one of the 2-inch risers along the north wall, in the angle formed by the side wall and sash bars, and to arrange one coil of nine $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch pipes on this wall. Each of the other three coils and supply pipes can be arranged on the posts carrying the gutters, arranging each supply pipe the same height and on the same grade as every other in the system. The house 8×37 will require a 2-inch supply and nine $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch pipes arranged in two coils, five on the most exposed side and four on the most protected side of the house.

A boiler to provide for the piping in these houses should have a capacity to provide for 1,800 feet of radiation. If constructed of $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch pipe 450 feet would be required. L. C. C.

NEW ORLEANS.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the New Orleans Horticultural Society took place last week. The most important business was to decide if our fall show should be postponed. Under the existing circumstances it was a hard matter to decide. The discussion was long, several members having different opinions. Finally it was voted to go on with the show. The exact place and time will be fixed soon.

President Chopin appointed a committee consisting of J. Newsham, J. Steckler, W. C. Eichling, H. A. Despommier and Paul Abele to correspond with all the horticultural societies of the southern states in regard to establishing an annual southern florists' convention. He submitted a partial list to the committee, which had been kindly furnished by the FLORISTS' REVIEW, of about twenty different organizations among the southern states with the idea to get their views on the subject. He made a few well appropriate remarks, saying that the time was ripe for such an undertaking. He had already received a letter from H. P. Loding, of Mobile, Ala. In his communication that gentleman says: "Seeing from the REVIEW of the movement on hand in our southern metropolis to form an inter-state horticultural society for the southern states, and knowing from experience how much a little encouragement from the outside helps, I wish to show my appreciation and endorsement of such a plan. Our interests differ somewhat with that of our northern brethren in more than one respect and for a great majority it is an impossibility to attend the convention of the S. A. F., both on account of distance and expense. Such a society as is contemplated by your body is not only a benefit, but an absolute necessity to our common welfare and the initiative ought to come from New Orleans."

The finance committee reported cash on hand, $707.50. Expenditures up to June 30, $148.90. Claude L. Ory was elected a member.

On exhibition we had a bunch of roses, Bride, Maid and Liberty, and Enchantress carnations, by H. Papworth, of the Metairie Nurseries. They were more appreciated being the first flowers grown in his newly erected greenhouses. R. Eichling had a fine specimen of Ficus pandurata.

The Chrysanthemum.

Now, and for the next five weeks, the attention of the florists of New Orleans will be on the chrysanthemum, which we all want to be in good condition for the first of November. Unlike the north, the queen of the fall flowers is appreciated here principally on that day. As long as our people call it "the dead people's flower" it will be the same. Before and after All Saints' day it is not much in demand, but on that day an enormous quantity is disposed of in New Orleans. If it were left to the regular florists to supply the market we could all realize a nice profit. The trouble is that outside growers fall into line on that day and overstock the market to such an extent that the prices are very often too low to be remunerative. A few years ago our largest supply came from the north, where we still have to go for the finest flowers, Mississippi also furnishing the

New Orleans market. Every season the home production is increasing. This year one of the largest producers will be J. E. Dubois. He has 25,000 plants, including seventy-five different varieties. Among the best for mid-season are Robinson, C. Holtz, Duchess d'Aube, Willowbrook, Wm. J. Peabody, Silver Thimble, The Queen, Merza, Mme. Bergmann, Merry Monarch. In pinks his choice will be E. G. Hill, Lady Harriott, Pink Grant, W. M. Simpson and Lilac Queen. A few of the best yellow are Gov. Roosevelt, Minerva and J. E. Lager.

J. Newsham, another good grower, has been more successful with his plants under glass, his outdoor stock being some way behind.

P. M. Chopin will be hard to beat with his mums planted in tubs and pots.

H. Rehm is raising a large quantity of a tall species of Adiantum capillus veneris. This variety seems to be adapted to our climate. M. M. L.

One Of Our Struggles

We have just been struggling to overcome a prejudice—not ours—but a florist's. He wanted one of our houses—has for over three years—but he believed in the school of experience—took a full course (from what he admits on repairs and costs in chilled plants)—and then came to us to “talk price.” Came 900 miles to do it. He said: “You build good enough houses, all right, good as any one, maybe a lot better, but aren't you a little high-priced?”

We just went into the whole constructive thing with that man, from turning the sod to turning on the heat. Showed him the kind of things we put into our houses—told him how all our Cypress was air-dried two years before using—gave him a rough lead pencil sketch of the way we harnessed the heat in our boilers—underlined the little perfections that go to make our ventilating devices what they are; even told him our formula for mixing putty, and showed him the things we made it of—then we “talked price” again. We are working away at that man's house now; it will be ready a full month before he wants it, some time in February.

If you are thinking of a house, take it up with us NOW and we can have it ready when you are ready. Catalog L-G.

PEOPLE who know a good thing when they see it, and will take advantage of the same, must be possessed with good judgment and are generally successful. One of our successful growers has this year taken out 6000 feet of wooden gutters, which were only 5 years old, and replaced the same with 6000 feet of the GARLAND IRON GUTTER, this being his fifth annual order.

SHADING THE BLOOMS.

Shading the blooms is absolutely necessary when they are developing in such summery weather as we are having at present. September 30 my thermometer showed 90 degrees in the shade at 2 p. m. and such a temperature is decidedly out of place for the perfect development of the chrysanthemum flowers. So long as the buds are not showing color, shading is not necessary, but the early kinds, that are nearly ready to cut, burn in a manner painful to see, unless protected from strong sunlight.

Why flowers should burn when growing on plants that have been well cared for and fed heavily, and not burn on plants that have been neglected and abused and received no additional nourishment, is something that may at first sight seem hard to understand. A little study of the situation, however, makes things easier. The chrysanthemum is naturally a sub-shrub in growth and left to itself makes a dense mass of short growths and small foliage. This growth is hard and woody and the flowers are numerous, small and insignificant. Man comes along and first makes the plant change its habit by running it up to one or two stems; then disbuds all side buds and keeps the plant to single flowers, and finally feeds heavily with nitrogenous fertilizers to swell up that single stem and flower to the largest possible size.

The consequence of all this is that the flower, though large enough, is soft and when, as in the present case, a few days of exceptionally warm weather set in, damping is to a large extent inevitable. When frosty nights set in, and the temperature is down where it normally belongs, the damping will cease, unless it happens that the plants have been overfed and are suffering from "bloat."

It has seemed to me that much of the damage is done in the early morning, when the sun hits the petals while they are still wet from the night moisture, and seems to rot them.

A certain percentage of loss by damping is always expected by the exhibition grower, who, in striving to get his flowers as large as possible, is always near the danger line of too much feeding, and only the most careful watching and knowledge often prevent wholesale damage when we get a hot fall. Damping is more prevalent along the eastern seaboard than in the interior of the country, because the air contains more moisture and the nearer one lives to the sea the more trouble does he encounter in this respect. Moral: "Go west, young man."

Early Flowers.

Early flowers are in and increasing in kind and quantity every day, but the market conditions are very different to what they were last year at this time. Early frosts had practically wiped out the dahlias and other outdoor stock, and the market was waiting with open arms for the first mums. Today dahlias are splendid in size and finish, and numberless in quantity, and outdoor stock of all descriptions is untouched by frost.

Marquis De Montmort, Fitzwygram and Monrovia are for sale in quantity and our first dozen Merstham Yellow were cut September 30.

Novelties.

It is a little early yet to say how the new importations are going to turn out, but some of them are far enough advanced to enable one to form some conclusions.

Lady Henderson shows a lovely, full flower of apricot yellow and every shoot has a perfect bud. It is dwarf and even in growth and from present indications may be set down as one of the good ones. It was raised by Pilsbury, I believe, in the Isle of Wight.

Mrs. G. Heaume comes next in the order of its development. It is an Australian variety and at the present time is half developed from the early buds. It would be difficult to imagine a nicer growth than this variety possesses. Stiff stem, very dwarf and good foliage, it seems destined to be a favorite for the exhibition growers. The color (salmon buff) is against it commercially, perhaps, but it seems a very reliable variety in every way.

It would seem that the Australian novelties as a whole are fully up to the high standard as to habit, foliage and other desirable attributes, that have characterized these kinds for the past few years, and in G. J. Brookes, Mrs. Henry Partridge, Miss May Seddon, Mrs. W. Knox and Mrs. F. F. Thompson I look to see some record breakers develop in the next few weeks.

THE WASHINGTON ARCH.

Coincident with the announcement of the death of Andreas Loeffler, at Washington, comes a photograph, reproduced herewith, showing the gate of his home grounds decorated for the lawn party given there by the Washington Florists' Club, for the S. A. F. on the evening of August 15. The decorations were in charge of O. A. C. Oehmler. Although somewhat ancient history, the picture will serve to awaken pleasant memories in the minds of the many whose good fortune it was to be present on that occasion.

Mr. Loeffler was the father-in-law of Wm. F. Gude, a native of Germany, 57 years of age. He made a considerable fortune in Washington and became a patron of horticulture. He was a Mason and an honorary member of the Washington Florists' Club. The floral display at the funeral was among the largest ever seen at the obsequies of a private citizen at the national capital.

FLORIST.....

STUDIES IN CLUSTERS.—I.

BY GERTRUDE BLAIR.

In this and the following article we shall discuss two different kinds of clusters, the first to be seen almost any day on any florist's counter, and the second too seldom seen, even on paper, as an ideal to be approached in the remote future, when all so-called practical questions have settled under their tombstones, and a happy generation has got the habit of weaving a thought into each product of the shop.

Since the two accompanying illustrations are excellent types of the average output of the trade, we should at least accord the style a place as one of the many types which should be seen, rather than the only one, to be duplicated a score of times at the same funeral. Simply because the great majority of florists use this style is no reason why it should be rated as a low type of design, but we shall endeavor to prove that it has no claim to being the only one.

In casting about for a cause for this one style getting such a hold upon the affections of the trade, there appears but one plea in its defense, namely, the ease with which it is put together. Keep in mind that it is not the contents nor the execution of the clusters which is being criticised, but only the style of arrangement, which we shall call a panel. In studying the second part of this article in the next issue it will be necessary to have this first part at hand.

The style of arrangement shown in both of the pictures illustrating today's notes is not properly called a "spray." The term spray reminds one of a light, thin combination of light and water that hovers over a waterfall, or a light branch that dangles from a vine, like the tip of a Clematis paniculata. The designs are not of such a nature; they are solid, symmetrical pieces, more resembling a panel of wood carving. Their highest claim to a place as designs proper is their conventionality. As far as the design, or idea, is concerned, there is none except for the first person who ever made a panel like this, for it is the kind that every florist's apprentice learns to do, and keep on doing mechanically.

"But," somebody will say, "it is the kind that people want and will buy." Possibly that is true, but it is the only kind that the majority of people ever see. Give customers something better and they will buy it. As a matter of education have a photograph of this kind and photographs of better styles, and side by side, let the buyer choose his style. You can bank upon the fact that the choice will not always fall upon the panel.

Compare the carnation piece with the rose piece. The same background of fern leaves is laid in both, the roses and carnations are added in each case in precisely the same way, forming the oval tip and round sides of the piece. Lilies, hyacinths, violets or any other flowers under the sun suitable for flat bunches, each find their way into panels of the same proportions and shape. Each form an elliptical cluster when complete. Ferns are added to complete the symmetry at the stem end, as is naturally demanded.

The execution of these two clusters is good. The mechanical skill is evidence of long practice and care. If one could have seen the work in doing he would have praised the ease and dexterity which were exhibited in its execution. The result is a perfect elliptical panel.

Well and good so far, but we do not want all of our funeral clusters to be elliptical panels. This style has its place as one among many, and many of more beauty than it can ever lay claim to. Why should the latest bunch of flowers be made like every other bunch? Make panels occasionally, if you admire the style, but vary the panels. Make some long and slender, if you have buds, and shorter and wider if you have full blown roses. If you have both, grade from one to another, the buds at the tip, the half open flowers connecting with the broad base of full blown flowers.

Even wagon wheels are varied in some details. What would we think of a painter of pictures who had but one scene to repeat upon every canvas, an architect who builded but one kind of house, or a tailor whose cut was the same for everybody and all occasions? Many a bridal bunch would serve for a funeral cluster, as far as distinguishing characteristics are concerned.

The illustration on page 1098 is reproduced from a photograph of a casket cover, or blanket made by A. Gude & Bro., Washington, D. A WORD FROM AN EMPLOYER.

I have read A. L. H.'s article on the relation of the greenhouse employee to his job, in the REVIEW for September 28. It is well that employees state their side of the question, for it gives the employers an opportunity to correct many an error.

In the first place let me say that the trade is yet so young that the "business type" of employer does not yet predominate in the craft. This condition results in two detrimental things: The proprietors are not sufficiently systematic that they know even approximately the cost of production of a certain line of stock and therefore sell at any price, absolutely regardless of cost, thereby injuring such as do try to sell at a reasonable profit; secondly, there is not sufficient effort put forth to reduce the cost of production to its lowest level. In this an intelligent employee can materially assist his employer and at the same time help himself to a start in life.

In the first of these instances the fault may be divided equally between the public and the dealer, the former because they do not learn the difference between high and low grade stock (perhaps more correctly speaking, fresh and stale stock), and the latter because we persistently refuse to educate the public. Success in business is founded on the absolute confidence of the public, and the public will not gain confidence in a florist who will sell low-grade stock at a high-grade price, or who will sell low-grade stock at a ridiculously low figure and then try to make the purchaser believe he is getting a high-grade article at a great sacrifice as a special favor. This policy may work all right for a while but in the long run it reacts against the guilty florist. Honesty pays better than much advertising. But if you have a high grade article, make a proper charge for its quality, for you may not be able to supply it at all times and you must impress upon the customer that such differences in price have very good reasons. If you do this your customers will come to consider you as a man of good judgment and will learn to rely upon you. So much for the income side of the business.

As I said before, the employee has much to do with the expense side of the business, and lucky is the man who is surrounded with a group of workmen who are imbued with the "esprit du corps," or that united spirit which labors in all its might to a common end. I hardly know of a place where there is so much leakage as in a greenhouse. If the fireman neglects his flues, he wastes heat. If he is inattentive to temperatures he not only wastes coal but influences quantity and quality of stock. Should he be careless about cleaning his grate and ash-pit he soon burns out a grate and new grates eat into earnings. If the grower is careless with the hose and kinks it in a dozen places he can wear out a good hose at least once a year, yet it takes no more time to manipulate a hose so it will not kink than to coil it up and yank it straight. Water can also be economized or wasted, as the case may be, with a great influence on cost, whether it is metered or pumped on the place, because it costs a certain fixed rate per hour to run a pump of any description, no matter what it is. How much air to admit and how much to exclude is also a matter for good judgment on the part of the grower. Too much air in winter wastes heat and too little wastes good stock. Don't waste any fertilizers—they cost money, and too much disorders the constitution of the plants—gives them indigestion. The propagator has also a big hand in determining the profit and loss of an institution. Careless selection of cuttings results in some good, some poor and some indifferent stock, from which the best returns cannot be obtained by any grower. Heat, moisture and air must be watched more closely here than anywhere else or you waste much valuable stock. The shipper should closely study his part of the business, to the end that "fancy" flowers don't grade "select" on arrival or "select" grade "common."

I have always noticed that the fellow who economizes and systematizes in his private affairs is likely to be economical in his employer's business. How many of our employees keep an expense account, showing how much they take in and how much they expend? Pardon me for taking you into personal experience. If I had failed to keep an accurate record of my private affairs from my earliest youth (I began at 15 years) I would not now be an employer. I am not one of the "whales" in my line, because I am still young (30 years old) and because I chose to train myself along broad lines. At the end of the year, if I failed to save as much as I thought I ought, I went over my expense account and made up a list of things I would eliminate the following year. The first year I discovered that my shoe bills went something like $12 per year and learned that if I picked up my feet in walking I could wear a pair of $3.50 shoes one year on an average. I also learned that by buying clothes of a firm texture and not following the latest fad too closely I could wear a $25 made-to-order suit five years—half the time as a dress suit and half the time as a working garb. By having a summer and winter suit my clothes cost me on an average of $10 per year and I was dressed as well as any ordinary business man in the city. My system of economy was not calculated to eliminate everything desirable—to get down to a mere existence—but to have a fair share of sensible luxuries without waste of resources. And I want to say right here that up to the time I went to college (at the age of 22) I never received over $7.50 per week and that all the money I received from home during my first two years in college was $120. The rest I earned and saved myself. Necessity reduced my fare to crackers, milk and bread for a whole year, that I might make ends meet. At the end of the two years my father, who was a well-to-do merchant, considered that I had learned my lessons in economics sufficiently well to justify him in seeing me through to graduation without further outside work. But before I went to college I had earned a musical education and a fair understanding of art, the expenditures for these accomplishments being nearly $700. By playing or singing in churches I made my musical education pay for itself after the first few hundred dollars had been spent. I attended the opera and drama when anything particularly good came along, but I was mighty choice about spending hard-earned cash on mediocre plays. I was also a smoker but only used tobacco when I could afford it. At one time it was found necessary to “cut out” smoking, so I consumed a dozen green Pittsburg stogies that set me against the habit so strongly that it lasted two years.

You will pardon me for dwelling at length on a subject that is so personal. But it is done to show young men that opportunities are still to be had for the grasping, as they were years ago. At the time our present rich men seized their opportunities there was as much chance for waste or economy as there is today. Look about you and figure out the percentage of men over fifty years that are well-to-do in any vocation! And yet this large majority of poor men failed for the same reason you are failing—because they could see no opportunities. Young men, buckle yourself right down to business. Save all you can wherever you can, for yourself and for your employer, and if he doesn't eventually make you a member of the firm he's a man who doesn't know how to get rich, and some other man will profit by your abilities.

AN EMPLOYER.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Ventilation and Heat.

The treatment you give your carnation plants during the next few weeks will have a very noticeable effect on your crop of blooms during at least the first half of the season, and possibly longer. Some growers think that with the plants safely established on the benches the battle is won and that thereafter any kind of care will do. But to grow high grade flowers you will find that, while the housing time is a critical time, there are other times that are just as dangerous. Perhaps the plants are not so apt to die outright, but they would better do that than to get into such a condition as may result from poor judgment and at a time when the weather is the least favorable for them to recover.

Such a time is coming now, during the next few weeks of irregular firing. Most growers are loath to begin firing until they are driven to it, especially those who grow carnations and such plants that do not show harm quickly from low temperature, etc. It is well to be as saving as is consistent, but there is a limit which the grower with good judgment will readily recognize and always heed. On the other hand, there is no need to put on your night man the first cool night and have him raise steam every night, warm or cold, and have the ventilators open full to keep the houses cool.

Those who grow roses or other plants needing fire right along now have easy sailing. The night man watches the houses and when the temperature in the carnation houses drops below 50 degrees he turns on the steam in one pipe and leaves the ventilators up a couple of inches. Have him close the ventilators only in case one pipe will not keep the temperature up to 50 degrees. If it takes more than one pipe to do that, then he would better close them a few hours, until it warms up a little, when he can raise them again.

A crack of air is always desirable but there are times when it is too expensive. If you do not grow any plants needing more heat than carnations, by using care and good judgment you can get along without firing a few days or weeks yet, according to your locality.

This year has been an exceptional one in many ways. For several years we have had light frosts about the third week in September and toward the last of the month fire heat was needed. This fall we have had no frosts and only two or three mornings below 45 degrees. On the morning of September 30 the thermometer stood at 68 degrees at seven o'clock. While it is warm like this you need not be told to keep the ventilators up, but when the mornings are cool, low in the forties or the upper thirties, then is when your fine work comes into play. The novice is inclined to close the ventilators to keep in the warmth, the worst mistake he can make. Better leave the ventilators up two inches, so the air can circulate. It is better for the plants to have the temperature below 50 degrees, with a little air on, than above 50 degrees with no air on. When the house is closed tight the atmosphere quickly becomes stuffy and foul and the plants make a soft growth that will produce soft blooms, and if you start into the winter with your plants in that condition they will give you trouble when it is severely cold and you can not raise the ventilators for days at a time.

Watch the watering, too. Do it early in the day so that the plants may dry off well before evening. Reduce the syringing to once each week if that will keep down the red spider. Don't wet down the walks any more. In fact, you want to encourage a sound, sturdy growth.

A. F. J. BAUR.

THE RUST.

Enclosed find some carnations. Please tell us what is the matter and what to do for them.

Mc. B.

Your carnations are affected with the common carnation rust. In the REVIEW of September 14 I explained fully the cause and the cure for this disease and if you will look up in that number my answer to "W. L. K." you will find all the information you are looking for. However, in case you may have mislaid that number of the REVIEW, I will just say that you should pick off the leaves that are spotted and burn them. Then dust the plants with air-slaked lime and keep the foliage and atmosphere dry except for the weekly syringing to keep down red spider. Give all the air you can whenever practicable.

I hope that you save all the numbers of the REVIEW and lay them away where you can get at them. If every grower would do this there would be fewer inquiries sent in for information about disease, etc. The REVIEW is always ready and anxious to help its subscribers and to give space to any information anyone has to offer, but how much better it is to be able to look up in a few minutes about something you want to know than to write and wait a week or two to find out, and the trouble growing worse each day. Nearly every issue contains some information that is worth saving, even for old, experienced growers and in the course of two or three years you will find articles on nearly all the more common diseases and insect pests, by men who are well informed and up-to-date, and written from a practical standpoint. I consider my back numbers of the REVIEW as valuable as any reference book I know of.

A. F. J. BAUR.

STEM-ROT.

I watch with much interest the discussion in the REVIEW, especially that which has to do with stem-rot of carnations. I see that it is not positively known what causes it, except that it is that awful floating germ. I have been pestered with the thing but I feel that I have been more fortunate than some of those who have told their troubles in the REVIEW. I have a house containing 1,500 and have had to replace only about seventy-five. Most of my plants were benched in April and May. I have been studying to find out the cause of the trouble and I have come to the conclusion that the first cause is that too much sand was left on the fine roots when planting; resulting in the water passing quickly through and away from the roots; hence to give the plant enough water it made it necessary to put on so much that the surrounding soil became soggy and sour. Then came the stem-rot.

ROSE LEAF BLIGHT.

I send some cuttings of roses that are injured in some way and would be pleased if you can tell me the trouble with same. My rose grower has been using Bordeaux mixture on my plants, which I think is the trouble, but I am not sure; I never saw this on roses before. He thinks it is an insect; so told him I would try and find out the trouble. Any information about this that you can give will be much appreciated.

J. K.

After receiving the foliage on these cuttings and carefully inspecting under a microscope I could see no evidence of injury by Bordeaux mixture. The foliage is, however, a little soft, but the main trouble is the parasite with which they are infested. The blotches on the leaves are caused by the rose leaf blight (Sphaerella rosigena). At first glance this appears very much like black spot, but a closer inspection shows a marked difference.

It usually manifests itself in irregular blotches of gray color, surrounded by a purple margin, both on the leaves, young wood and bud stem. It is more prevalent on teas than on hybrids. The principal cause is a low temperature, with excessive humidity, which should be guarded against by free ventilation and a temperature of not less than 56 degrees at night.

The same precautions and same remedies should be applied as recommended in the case of black spot. This pest is not nearly so virulent or so hard to extirpate as the last mentioned and generally disappears after a short season of steady firing such as will now soon be at hand.

RIBES.

EXTERMINATING BUGS.

Will you please inform me how to get clear of sow bugs, and worms and bugs in the rich ground in my greenhouse and in the garden adjoining? They cut up and destroy plants and entail much loss.

J. B. R.

It is difficult, if not impossible, to entirely clean out sow bugs or wood lice. They can, however, be kept in check by mixing a decoction of powdered sugar, bran and white arsenic, or one of powdered sugar, bran and Paris green, near their haunts. The same dose will answer for cockroaches or cut worms. The latter are particularly destructive in May and June, as they feed at night and hide at the base of the plants in the day time. They must be sought at night with lanterns or picked out of the soil during the day.

The word "bug" has such a wide significance that it embraces in common phraseology everything attacking plants. It would need columns of the REVIEW to give anything like a complete list of these and how to fight them. The larvæ of the May beetle, or June bug, were very destructive this year in the east, and it does a great deal of damage in greenhouses, especially to roses, carnations and violets, living, as it does, on the roots of these plants. It attacks lawns, and hundreds of acres in New England are destroyed by it this season. Strawberries and other plants also suffer. Cow manure is a fertile spreader of this pest. It can be destroyed by injecting a little bisulphide of carbon in the soil at intervals. If it is bad on the outside land, dress it with kainit and nitrate of soda at the rate of 500 pounds of the former and 200 pounds of the latter to the acre.

All these underground foes are hard to fight and at best we can but mitigate the damage. As a rule they work most harm on dry land during a hot, dry season. The carbon bisulphide will be found effective inside and will not injure the plants in the least. If it is found, another season, that the compost to be used on the benches is badly infested with worms and larvæ it will pay to treat the whole with the same remedy ere carrying it in. W. N. C.

HOUSTON, TEX.

Death of Wm. Kutschbach.

Wm. Kutschbach, the well known florist, died very suddenly September 14. Mr. Kutschbach was born in Erfurt, Germany, December 24, 1843. He fought in the German war in 1866, coming to America shortly after, residing in Houston for many years. Marie Proetzel, a daughter of one of the oldest families, became his wife over thirty years ago.

Mr. Kutschbach was a grower of cut flowers, ferns, palms and especially of large chrysanthemums, and had taken a great number of first prizes in the southern exhibitions. He was the first to grow carnations in Houston.

This last year he gave the largest part of his business to his eldest son, August E. Kutschbach, who has taken great interest in it and is still enlarging the plant. Mr. Kutschbach is survived by his wife, four daughters and two sons.

THOUSAND-LEGS.

We mail you under separate cover a box of small worms which we took from the soil of a potted palm. The palm showed no ill effects until removed to a dwelling; then the older leaves turned brown as if it were sun-burned, but as it was not in the sun at all we know it was not that. The plant sat in a jardiniere and these little mites crawled out and clung to the outside of the pot. We have had several plants do this and thought it was caused by cutting some of the roots as they were repotted, but they showed no ill effects until now and they have been repotted a couple of months. Please inform us of a remedy for this pest. J. H. C.

The worms in question are millepedes, or thousand-legs, the scientific name of which is julus, the eggs of which are buried in the soil by the mature insect, and are usually hatched out in about three weeks. Entomologists believe that these insects live upon decaying vegetable matter chiefly, and it is not probable that they have caused any injury to the palms, though the millepedes sometimes eat the tender young fronds of the maidenhair ferns just as the growth starts from the ground. The browning of the palm leaves was more likely caused by the plant getting dry. A strong fumigating with nicotine will kill most of these insects, or a watering with lime water will be likely to drive them from the soil. W. H. TAPLIN.

THE GALL FLY MAGGOT.

Will you kindly give us an article on the gall fly maggot, the best way to deal with them in a violet house, etc.? Anything you can give us on the gall fly will be read with much interest by the violet growers along the Hudson and elsewhere, as this month they are at their worst. J. M. L.

Among plants grown in greenhouses the violet and rose are quite subject to the attack of minute maggots, the young of two-winged flies or gnats known to florists generally as "gall flies." The violet-feeding species is most generally termed the violet gall fly. It is technically known as Diplosis violicola, and makes its presence manifest in folded-up leaves of the violet, which are brought together in such a manner as to form what is popularly termed a gall. The insect which produces this effect is quite small and legless, and of a whitish or yellowish color. Its general appearance is shown highly magnified at "d" in the accompanying illustration.

The parent gall fly, or gnat, is a slender, delicate, two-winged fly which measures about one-twentieth of an inch. It has slender legs and antennæ or feelers, as shown in the illustration at "a." The principal characters of the antennæ are shown at "b" highly magnified. The origin of this species is not known, but it is quite probable that it has been introduced from abroad, and is perhaps also, like most insects with an indoor habit, of tropical origin. It is common in New York state, especially along the Hudson river, where violets are much grown for the trade, and occurs also southward to Virginia and the District of Columbia. As it first attracted attention in 1896 with the introduction of the so-styled California violet, there is some suspicion that it might have been brought eastward from the Pacific coast.

The full life history of this insect has not been investigated. It has been noted, however, that after the formation of the "gall" wet rot is apt to set in and destroy the violet leaves; this having the ultimate effect of dwarfing the plants and arresting the development of the flower buds.

The opinion has been expressed that this insect develops in the soil as well as upon the leaves, but the probabilities are that the soil-feeder is a different form of insect of similar appearance, the maggot of one of the fungus gnats.

As to remedies, we have no record of hydrocyanic acid gas having been tested against this gall maggot. It should be nearly as effective as when employed for aphides, such as the brown or black aphid of violets. Its use is therefore suggested. When only a few galls are found, they should be picked promptly and burned. When many are present, it hardly seems practical to employ this method. The use of air-slaked lime thrown into the crowns has been advised. I do not, however, know of its effectiveness. The best cultural conditions possible should be maintained, such as good ventilation and frequent stirring of the soil. The free use of Buhach, or Persian insect powder, at the time when the mature gall flies are seen flying about the greenhouses, especially on the glass, would also accomplish considerable in lessening the numbers of this pest.

I hope that readers of the REVIEW will report on the effectiveness of hydrocyanic acid gas or the insect powder if they experiment with these or other remedies. F. H. CHITTENDEN.

LETTUCE TO FOLLOW MUMS.

If this crop is intended to follow chrysanthemums the plants should be ready to set in the benches as soon as the chrysanthemums are cut.

If the early varieties have been grown in a bench by themselves the bench they occupy could be planted as soon as it can be made ready and the others according as the benches are cleared. Even although the temperature has to be run a little higher to suit the chrysanthemums, it will not do the lettuce any harm, as the days are still warm and the sun bright. This can be depended on to counteract any tendency to softness of growth. If the soil is fairly good there will be no need of changing it for the lettuce. In fact, unless the soil is really run out we prefer to leave it rather than use fresh material for lettuce, our experience convincing us that it does not do so well in fresh soil, as in soil from which at least one crop has been taken, so we invariably change the soil before setting the chrysanthemums unless the soil is good enough, with the addition of manures, to carry through both crops.

Assuming that the chrysanthemums have been liberally fed, no more manure will be needed for the lettuce crop than the soil already contains, but the soil should be well forked up and what manure has been used as top dressing well worked into the soil. And should the soil be anyway heavy through the frequent applications of liquid manure, a dusting of air-slaked lime worked into it will help to lighten it up and put it in better condition for the lettuce crop.

Successional sowings should not be neglected, nor the transplanting of the seedlings into flats as soon as they are large enough to handle. It is always safest to keep a good stock on hand so that there will be no shortage of plants when they are wanted for the benches. It is always safer to have a few plants too many rather than be in danger of running short.

Plants in frames will need closer attention in the way of covering at night now that the nights are getting colder. If they have been grown hard a little frost would not do them a great deal of harm but they are much better without it and it does not take long to cover the frames if mats or shutters are conveniently at hand.

W. S. CROYDON.

SOIL STERILIZING.

As heavy losses are annually sustained by growers of tomatoes and cucumbers from the attack of eelworms, the following extract from the bulletin of the United States Department of Agriculture on tomato culture should be of interest to many:

"The soil for the production of tomatoes should be well decomposed loam, made, if possible, from the turf from an old pasture, the soil of which is a rather light clay loam or a heavy sandy loam. With this should be incorporated about one-fourth of its bulk of well-rotted farmyard manure, preferably cow manure. By composting these two materials for from four to six months before they are required for use a very satisfactory soil for the forcing of tomaatoes will result. It is not well to allow the soil to remain in the house longer than a single season. It becomes somewhat exhausted, and is likely to become infested with injurious forms of life, particularly nematodes, which cause root-knots upon the tomato plants. This trouble, however, can be removed by sterilizing by steam. Sterilization can be carried on in boxes twelve inches to fifteen inches or eighteen inches deep, in the bottom of which are steam pipes with perforations every two inches, the perforations being about one-sixteenth of an inch in diameter, and so placed that they are on the under-side of the pipe. The pipes are arranged in coils and distributed far enough apart to allow the blade of a spade to be worked between them. A lid to fit the top of the box should be provided, and the box should be made to hold one or two cart-loads of compost. After subjecting the soil to the action of the steam a sufficiently long time to cook a potato buried in it the soil will have become thoroughly sterilized."

THE IDEAL EMPLOYER.

[An essay by Austin F. Faulkner, Anacostia, D. C., submitted in the S. A. F. competition and, while not awarded a prize, judged by the editor to be worthy of publication and special mention.]

As a prelude, let this fact stand out in bold relief: The employer carries a burden of responsibility that, while he holds the reins, cannot be transferred to another. Having embarked in business, it is his to make that business prosperous, meet his financial obligations and preserve his standing in the business world. To do this—and yet to be at all times an ideal employer calls for the exercise of high qualities of mind and heart.

Though the employer cannot place his business on the plane of a charitable and benevolent institution, his treatment of his employees should be marked by both charity and benevolence. Charity for their unintentional errors and inherited shortcomings; benevolence for those who have served long and faithfully.

The ideal employer is prompted, not only by sound business principles, but as an act of justice to his employees, as well, to provide safe and convenient facilities for work. Having done this he has the right to expect that his employees will appreciate these facilities in a manner that will redound to mutual advantage and profit. He will give very serious consideration to the character of his help. He will not be swayed by political or religious prejudice; but he must consider those moral qualities which make for good citizenship. An active brain and skillful hands, admirable as they are, cannot atone for the lack of integrity and moral principle in their possessor.

It must be acknowledged that this is a vexing question, and there is abundant evidence at hand to show that it is one to which many employers pay little attention, excepting to safeguard as much as possible their own interests. The ideal employer will use means to prevent the contamination of the pure and innocent by association with the depraved. The foregoing has particular reference to places where many young persons are employed. The employer, during the hours of labor, is their guardian, and it is as much a part of his business to safeguard their moral welfare as it is to use all reasonable means to keep them from bodily harm.

Ours is a land on which prosperity has smiled. Poets, orators and essayists have portrayed our material advancement in rhythmic numbers, in finished diction and convincing statistics. The ideal employer is not in the labor market seeking retainers, serfs or sycophants; but on the contrary, he is seeking men and women of physical and moral strength, well equipped for the battle of life. He will find many who are equal and even superior to himself in the capacity for physical and mental application. Their work is fruitful with results and his business prospers. He will therefore be profoundly impressed with the fact that his good fortune is in a large measure due to their faithful and untiring efforts for the advancement of his interests, and will liberally remunerate them according to their labors and responsibilities. He will not only pay them good wages, but will by other means make them feel that he appreciates their services and that a bond of mutual interest has been established and cemented.

It is unnecessary to here enumerate the cheap and unworthy devices by which many employers put themselves out of the ideal class. It is enough to state that the ideal employer is a high-minded gentleman or gentlewoman who scorns the tricks of the fakir. Discipline must be enforced; profits must be realized; order and decorum must prevail. But all this will be accomplished in a spirit of justice and responsibility.

In commercial transactions and manufacturing there is a third party to the relations of the employer and employee, and that is the patron, customer or buyer, summarized as the public. Be it food, raiment or other material things, the buyer expects and is entitled to good value for his money.

Dishonest dealings cannot be made respectable by being labeled as "demands of business." In a western prison are now confined five ex-bank officials, and it would be interesting to learn how many of them began their downward career by placing their distorted views of the demands of business before honesty. It is not an ideal employer that condones sharp practice by his employees or customers.

But the ideal employer will impress and enforce fearless honesty on those under him; rendering "unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's and unto God the things which are God's."

THE METAIRIE PLANT.

The new greenhouse plant of the Metairie Ridge Nursery Co., at New Orleans, is the largest and most complete of its kind in the whole south. It covers 60,000 square feet of ground, or one and one-half acres. It is equipped with the very latest appliances in heating, ventilating and watering.

It is strictly a New Orleans enterprise, the company being backed by local capital and headed by southern men.

The plant was begun last April and has been in process of building ever since. It is located on Metairie Ridge. Louisiana cypress has been used almost exclusively in the construction, and a peculiar feature is that although the timber came from Louisiana swamps, it was found advantageous to buy it milled at Chicago. Over two car-loads of 1¼-inch piping were used in constructing the heating plant. In glazing the roofs of the houses, two car-loads of glass and over three tons of putty were used, with six tons of white lead in the painting. A large packing and potting house is located to the rear of the greenhouses, 25x165 feet, slate covered. The water is supplied by Bayou Metairie, which passes through the grounds. Two large gasoline engines are used to pump water into two large tanks, elevated on 30-foot towers.

For irrigating purposes, a 6-inch centrifugal pump and an electric motor are used. This pump has a capacity of 1,000 gallons per minute, located on the Seventeenth street canal, and brings the water through 6-inch iron pipes a distance of 1,000 feet to the nursery.

It is the aim of this new nursery concern to grow cut flowers on a scale never before undertaken in the far south. Harry Papworth is president; A. R. Blakely, vice-president; Dr. Isadore Dyer, treasurer, and Charles L. Sieber, secretary. The first roses and carnations from the new greenhouses were cut on September 16.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—Louis A. Riemer is installing the heating apparatus in the new greenhouses of Robert Wolff.

BAY SHORE, N. Y.—The Bay Shore Horticultural Society will hold its second annual exhibition at Coulton opera house October 24 and 25. The premium list may be had by addressing Secretary J. J. Carroll.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—The fall show is now assured. The Sunshine Society will have charge, the florists providing the exhibits. The trade committee consists of J. A. Newsham, P. A. Chopin, Chas. Eble and Paul Abele.

FINDLAY, O.—N. R. and Earl Swan have sold their greenhouses and business to J. J. Waaland & Co., who are now conducting the establishment. Mr. Waaland was formerly foreman for the Fostoria Floral Co., Fostoria, O. N. R. Swan will devote all his time to his greenhouse business at Lima.

I HAVE much pleasure in saying a few words in praise of the REVIEW, as I find your very valuable paper a great source of profit and pleasure. I look forward every week for its arrival and would not be without it for several times the price. —JOSEPH SLADE, Red Deer, Alberta.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

The fall opening decorations were the most potent factor in the market at the beginning of this week, although trade is improving with the retail florists. The unusually warm weather has had the effect of retarding the revival of business, but things are gradually getting under way again. Receipts are not increasing as rapidly as was expected and buyers sometimes find difficulty in securing stock for special requirements.

The Beauty market continues well cleaned up but large crops are said to be in immediate prospect. However, it is not yet always possible to supply the grade of Beauties wanted and prices hold up well. Brides and Bridesmaids grade very well for the season. The best stock cleans up quickly and requirements should be made known early. Chatenay is abundant and popular. Liberty is not very good and Richmond is much to be preferred.

There are large supplies of carnations, some of which are of excellent quality, particularly Enchantress. Stems on many varieties are now fair, but this cannot yet be said of Lawson. Chrysanthemums are not yet in sufficient supply to make them a factor in the market. There are many more orders than there are mums. A very few days, however, will see receipts largely increased. Violets, which have been a staple item of stock for more than two weeks, are showing some improvement, although the New York product frequently shows evidence of overheating on its journey. Asters are gone and gladioli nearly finished. Dahlias are now the principal outdoor product. Some exceedingly fine ones are seen and have been used in big store decorations, also for window display.

Valley holds its steady course. Harrisii continues to stiffen in price, receipts being light. Green stock has been in demand for decorations. The supply is large.

Coliseum for Flower Show.

There was a meeting of interested parties at the office of the Bentley-Coatsworth Co., on Tuesday afternoon, at which it was decided to accept a proposition made by the management of the Coliseum, and the flower show will be held there November 7 to 11. The arrangement is regarded as a most favorable one and the best show Chicago has ever had seems now assured. The hall is the largest in the west and many times larger than any ever used before for the local show. It will give unlimited space, with ample seating capacity for the visitors. With a week of good weather there is no reason why the show should not be the greatest financial success on record. George Asmus is to be manager again and will repeat his good work of last year.

Fall Openings.

Decorations at department stores have served to keep some of the retailers employed this week. Much stock has been used and Saturday and Sunday saw considerable skirmishing for supplies. Fleischman had the decoration at Mandel's and is said to have received $1,500 for the showing made on Monday morning. Wittbold had the decoration at Field's, at the Colonial theater and at Stevens & Bros. Field's buy most of their cut flowers in the open market and are able to get trade prices, as they buy every business day in the year. Friedman continued the Carson-Pirie decoration first put up last week.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club had a well attended meeting September 28. The nomination of officers was the principal order of business. After a number had declined to accept office, a committee proposed the following slate: President, P. J. Hauswirth; vice-president, Leonard Kill; secretary, Louis Winterson; financial secretary, George Asmus; treasurer, Edgar Sanders; trustees, F. F. Bentley, J. P. Risch, H. N. Burnus, Jos. F. Klimmer and W. L. Palinsky. There was a general discussion on the good of the club, including the change to one meeting night a month, which will be up for final adoption October 12. It was suggested that meeting in the afternoon, as is the custom at St. Louis, would serve to bring in a number who do not now attend. Music and refreshments served to add to the interest of the occasion.

Various Notes.

E. Wienhoeber says that September business was a little better than a year ago, even with unfavorable weather conditions. He looks for good business in another ten days. Mr. Wienhoeber leaves the latter part of this week for a few days' trip east.

E. C. Amling is pleased with the record he made on asparagus on Sunday. In the morning he supplied 700 strings to the Wittbold Co. and at 12:30 Fleischman asked for 500 strings and had them at 4 o'clock.

John Ghormley opened Fleischman's new North State street store last Thursday. The store has been thoroughly remodeled and a conservatory added in the rear since "Moscow" closed up. A great deal of money has been spent on the furnishings, the walls being in mosaic and the wood work of oak finished in green. There is no prettier store in town. A formal opening will be announced later in the month.

The E. F. Winterson Co. has for a week been receiving dahlias from the L. K. Peacock Co., of Atco, N. J. The equal of the stock has never been seen in Chicago, but the distance is a little too great and some shipments have been so badly bruised that little could be done with them. However, the stock which could be selected out has sold very quickly, the varieties being of the best. If such blooms were in regular local supply there would be a different opinion as to the cut flower value of the dahlia.

W. F. Scofield, 148 North State street, is busy redecorating his store. He will have a very neat place when the work is completed.

C. T. Neiglick, 239 North State street, has a nice place and is doing a good business.

G. E. Pieser, secretary of the Kennicott Bros. Co., leaves the latter part of this week for a few days' vacation trip to New York.

C. Carlson has finished cutting his crop of asters and is now harvesting his crop of seed, of which he annually produces quite a quantity.

O. P. Bassett is at West Baden, Ind.

J. C. Buckner, formerly with A. Lange, has opened a new retail store at 87 Monroe street.

P. Weiler, of the Superior Machine and Boiler Works, who is known to practically every grower in this vicinity, has been on the sick list all summer and his many friends will be glad to know that he is again able to be about.

The A. L. Randall Co. reports that October 2, 1905, was the best October day in the history of the concern, with the single exception of October 30 of last year, this being the day known locally as New Orleans day; All Saints' day is November 1.

September was the warmest in recent years. On the last day of the month the midday temperature was 80 degrees.

A. L. Vaughan spent Wednesday at Grand Rapids.

The Chicago Commercial Association will hold its annual banquet at the Auditorium Saturday night. It will call for a big decoration as the guests will number about 1,500.

Prices on greenhouse glass have eased off slightly in the past few days.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business is not as steady yet as it might be, though there are some signs of revival. Prices are stiffening on first grade stock. Other grades do not show any advance. Outdoor stuff is gradually disappearing, except cosmos, which is just now of fine quality. All varieties of roses are improving in size and color. Good long Beauties are in demand. Other roses are abundant, many more than the trade could use the past week.

Carnations are coming in with longer stems and better blooms. Enchantress and Lawson are the best sellers. Fancy grades are not too many. Plenty of whites from the field are in. There were plenty of violets the past week, but still too small and pale to command much attention. There is nothing to report as to chrysanthemum blooms, as only a few whites are in the market. The trade is in hopes that they will be in next week in time for the horse show, which opens on October 9. Valley is selling well.

Tuesday trade was brisk, owing to the great Veiled Prophets' ball, which used up a lot of fancy Beauties and carnations.

A Social Meeting.

Another of those social features of the Florists' Club took place September 27. This affair was given by Messrs. Weber and Miller, who reciprocated for the pleasant entertainments given them before and after returning from their trip to Europe this summer. The members were requested to meet at Theo. Miller's place at 2 o'clock and nearly thirty-five responded to the call. They were escorted across the way to a garden which was nicely decorated for the occasion and where a band of music played as we entered. In the center of the garden was a long table on which anything a man wanted to eat was spread. After satisfying the inner man, President J. F. Ammann, who acted as toast-master, called upon Fred C. Weber and Theo. Miller to give the boys a talk on their trip through Europe. Each gentleman talked on the good, bad and humorous sides of his travels. President Ammann called on others to speak for the good of the club. Among the members called upon were John Steidel, Frank Fillmore, Fred Meinhardt, C. C. Sanders, Otto Koenig, Carl Beyer, A. Jablonsky, E. W. Guy and J. J. Beneke. After a few songs and funny stories the party broke up and the occasion is one long to be remembered by those present.

Various Notes.

James S. Wilson, of Western Springs, Ill., was in town the past week, calling on friends and visiting his mother, who lives here.

F. Hibbart, of De Soto, Mo., spent Saturday in St. Louis with his young son, who attends school here. Mr. Hibbart reports that they will have a fine lot of extra good carnations this season. He hopes for a return bowling match with the boys some time this winter.

The Bentzen Floral Co., on Marcus avenue, has a fine lot of carnation plants, which are selling well.

Carl G. Fulmer, son of J. D. Fulmer, of Des Moines, Ia., was a caller the past week. Young Mr. Fulmer is thinking of locating here, but not in the florists' business.

John Cannon, of Webster Groves, who has a fine team of mules, came to the rescue of the fire department at his place last week. He acted as driver on the big engine. On responding to an alarm the mules ran away, passing the fire on two wheels. Before the team was stopped the fire was put out by the bucket brigade.

William Lingenbrink, well known in the trade here, writes from Florence, Italy, that he will return soon and open a flower store next spring. He has been very successful since leaving here four years ago.

A. Jablonsky reports that he will have

Close Don't Count

You have to give your customers exactly what they want. No matter how close you come to it, if you don't do it, you are as badly off as if you didn't try.

The only way that you can be sure of giving your customers the best flowers for their money, is to make sure that you are getting the best flowers for your money. The best way to make sure of that is to buy from us. We can be sure of that ourselves because we grow them.

a fine lot of Begonia Gloire de Lorraine and other holiday plants this year.

Here are some facts that as a club member must interest you: The next meeting will take place next Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock in Odd Fellows' building. President Ammann will be in the chair. The flower show committee will make a report as to how matters are progressing. The trustees will report as to essays for the winter meetings and on a change of meeting place. A vote will be taken on incorporation. The committee on "crape pullers" will report with resolutions which are to be voted upon. The above should interest every member of the club.

C. Young & Sons Co. was busy Monday and Tuesday, decorating the big Merchants' Exchange hall for the Veiled Prophets' ball, which was the event of the season.

Pilcher & Burrows, commission brokers, have moved their office to 1316 Pine street, in the wholesale district.

The florists' league team was again defeated two out of three games by the Union Soda team on Tuesday night. Ellison was high, with 496; Capt. Beyer and R. Meinhardt, 478; Kuehn, 461; Beneke, 455. For three games 2368 is poor bowling and the boys promise to redeem themselves in this week's match.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

"The warmest first day of October in thirty-five years." Such was the official record and it is not difficult to draw the inference. Everybody and everything, including the wholesale cut flower market, was depressed. Some used stronger words to express their opinions. There was no denying the fact, however. The premature cool wave of prosperity of a week ago had subsided. There was not a ripple on the sea. It was "dead quiet" and it will be until "the frost is on the pumpkin."

Plenty of stock is arriving. Orchids, roses, carnations, violets; the staples are all abundant and some of the arrivals are extra fine. The lower grades go at the buyer's option, or go elsewhere. Roses were especially abundant. Carnations improve in quality and increase in numbers daily. The very best do not easily realize $2.

Orchids are plentiful. Almost all the retail windows utilize them for decorative effect. Prices are lower, but their popularity and the rapidity with which the best buyers are returning to the city will soon boost them to normal values again. One big orchid wedding in the near future will use 1,000 cattleyas. The oncidiums are much used for window decoration. Violets are improving in color, but the already large shipments increase. The top price is 50 cents and the "left-overs" often go as low as $1 per thousand. Violets should never be sent to the New York market before October, unless the weather justifies the risk. Now it will take many weeks to restore their prestige. I question if violets will touch $1 before Thanksgiving.

The heralds of the chrysanthemum flood are arriving. As usual first prices are high and the novelty of the early shipments and their scarcity ensure good prices, $2 to $4 a dozen for the best. There were not many shipments up to Monday evening, but before the week is over there will be enough and to spare. Gladioli this week gracefully retire from the field. The Childs output is over. Cowee is still shipping, but Saturday will see the end. Asters, too, are retrograding in quantity and quality and are on their last legs.

If the frost delays the dahlia has still a chance to assert itself. No better stock has ever reached the New York market. Gunther says the city can use it all and there is no necessity for shipping it out of town. The big stores all use the fine cactus varieties for window effect and are creating a demand for the new kinds that is unusual. Lilies are improving in price and valley holds its own, the best maintaining a $3 value with ease.

A Visit to Miller's.

A. L. Miller, of Brooklyn, entertained the officers and trustees of the New York Florists' Club, with members of the different committees, at his Jamaica place on Friday and at an elegant banquet at the Piel dining hall in East New York in the evening. The thirteen acres Mr. Miller has purchased on the Freeport turnpike are finely situated and cannot fail to grow rapidly in value. The electric road passes the door and school and other facilities make this an ideal place for a home. Mr. Miller is devoting considerable land to nursery stock and has already several acres in evergreens, roses and deciduous trees. The trip was arranged especially to see the grand new dahlias controlled by Mr. Miller, the Pearl of the Park and Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, two of the finest whites, of which he has now an immense stock. Other varieties of merit grown here are Countess of Lonsdale, Penelope, Camelliaflora, Grand Duke Alexis and Livoni. Several houses have been erected here by Mr. Miller and are devoted to carnations. He is able to dispose of his output easily at his retail establishment in Brooklyn. A hearty vote of thanks was given Mr. Miller for the delightful afternoon and evening. Among those present were Messrs. Patrick O'Mara, F. H. Traendly, Loechner, of Suzuki & Iida; Lenker, Birnie, Zeller, Dummett, Wiltshire, Neilsen, Scott, Hiltman, Siebrecht, Pendelton, Langjahr and the newspaper men.

Schloss Bros., the ribbon house, were losers by the McDonald failure to the amount of nearly $700. The total liabilities were over $6,200. The only assets were a horse, two wagons and a few accounts, the whole aggregating less than $500.

The October meeting of the New York Florists' Club takes place next Monday, October 9, at the rooms in the Grand opera house building, on Twenty-third street. The display of mums and dahlias is expected to be a creditable one. Bulb-ons stock will be exhibited and all are cordially invited to send any novelties in care of Secretary Young, who will see that they are properly staged and cared for. The nominating committee will make its report. The question box will be opened, and Patrick O'Mara will discourse upon his experience in the west this summer, a program that should ensure a large attendance.

The captain of last season's bowling club requests all interested in the formation of a new club to meet him at Thum's alleys on Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock. A few hours' practice will be enjoyed and all visiting members from out of town are cordially invited to attend.

A great deal of work has been done by the retailers lately on account of the opening of the theatres. The Thos. Young Co. was busy until late Monday evening with orchid and Beauty bouquets for Lillian Russell that must have cost some broker several shares of Standard Oil stock, and these were only a counterpart of the orders all the big retail stores have been filling during the past ten days.

The plant business is booming. Many of the wholesale houses now handle palms and ferns and some fine Scottii and Boston ferns are seen.

Hicks & Crawbuck, of Brooklyn, have moved into their new quarters at 76 Court street, where they have over 6,000 square feet of space and every facility for a larger business.

Frank Millang has recovered from an illness of several days' duration that at one time threatened appendicitis.

J. K. Allen has been laid on the shelf a few days with a severe cold, but is again on duty at 6 a. m.

William Ghormley, who has been quite ill, is improving and is looked for at his headquarters daily.

Walter Sheridan and family, who have been sojourning at Sea Girt during the summer, return this week to their city home.

Siebrecht's white palace is finely stocked and handsomely decorated for the coming season. An abundance of cattleyas from their own conservatories, arranged as a gigantic floral arch, made an effective window.

The return of many of the Newport forces to their New York headquarters indicate the close of the season in the city by the sea.

Those who journey past Fifth avenue on Thirty-fourth street will see the most novel effect New York has ever beheld in store decoration. Outside and in the Rosary has used birch bark without stint and with rare detail and harmony, so that every bit of woodwork, wall and ceiling, is covered with it. The general effect is charming. J. BOSTON.

The Market.

Conditions continue satisfactory in the flower market and will probably remain so until the coming avalanche of chrysanthemums disorganizes it. Roses have commanded rather higher prices, some extra fine Bridesmaid and Kaiserin making up to $10 per hundred. Liberty is selling well at somewhat advanced prices. Beauties are improving in quality, price on these remaining about the same. Carnations come in increasing numbers, but all clear out easily, rates varying from $1.50 to $4, only a small number going at the two extreme rates.

A fair number of single violets are seen, but they are not in much demand yet, about 50 cents per hundred securing the best. Some good Marquis de Montmort chrysanthemums have brought $3 per dozen, Fitzwygrams going at $10 to $15 per hundred. Glory of Pacific and Polly Rose are nearly ready to cut

Various Notes.

Killing frosts occurred on September 27 over a large portion of Massachusetts. Dahlias except in sheltered locations were destroyed.

We hear mixed reports of Carnation Fiancee. Some growers state that it is doing finely, others that it is full of bacteria.

The committee having in hand the preparation of the complete schedule of prizes to be given by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society for 1906 has made considerable change in the same. Collections of fruit will be quite a feature, and vegetables are better provided for.

The club meeting on October 17 promises to be unusually interesting and a record-breaking attendance is expected. J. A. Pettigrew's account of his visit to England, Scotland, France, etc., should prove very interesting. Additional applications for membership are already coming in.

Peter Murray's new carnation, Winsor, recently purchased by the F. R. Pier-son Co., is doing better than ever at his greenhouses in Fairhaven and should rank high among the novelties at the carnation convention in January.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

A Visit to Sylvania.

After seeing the nice display of dahlias made by Mr. Cushman at our last club meeting the writer made up his mind to see the home of these fancy flowers. He received a genial greeting from the proprietor and, while being shown about the dahlia fields, was given a sample of about every variety that was in bloom at the time and became so loaded down that he had to share his burden on the interurban car with all the lady passengers.

About four acres of dahlias are in full bloom, half of this area being covered by tents made out of tobacco cloth. About twenty acres of gladioli and quite a space of peonies and other hardy stuff complete the plantation of this season.

Local Notes.

At George Bayer's about 50,000 mums are attending strictly to business and are looking fine. One-half of his houses, 750 feet long, is planted to mums and the other half to carnations. Of the latter he grows all the principal varieties and always tries the new ones. He always has a batch of his own seedlings on trial. The carnations are beginning to crop nicely, but with short stems as yet.

At Suder's they are not yet quite in shape for the winter, as they repaired and reglazed all the old houses on their Cherry street place, but the mums and carnations are looking fine and E. Suder reports business as being first rate. Mrs. H. Suder thinks she ought to quit business because she cannot get the right kind of help, but as she hustles as much as any two or three common people it will be a good many years before she really will quit.

T. N. Keller, of the bay shore, is hustling his two new houses along in good shape. He brought in some of the best asters seen in this market and was not troubled very much with the black aster beetle. He thinks that a large flock of his neighbor's ducks and chickens took care of them.

Rode Bros., of Bowling Green, are having their share of trouble. While rebuilding their old houses Erick Rode was taken sick with typhoid fever and after four weeks of this is just out of danger. Of course the work on the new houses is a little behind, but with the favorable weather we are having things are coming their way anyhow.

Our next club meeting will be held at the club room in Liberty hall on October 18. If any one has anything new to show he should advise our secretary, S. N. Peek.

DETROIT.

The Market.

Although business was rather quiet the past week, stock kept pretty well on the move. Asters are a thing of the past and with chrysanthemums still very scarce, carnations are selling at a good price. A few violets found their way into the market this week, but they are still very poor.

The weather the past week was anything but favorable to start business, being very warm, but all are hoping for a cool spell to come soon and start the parties and receptions.

Various Notes.

George A. Rackham has an elegant lot of cyclamens.

Ed Beard reports everything doing fine, even the baby, which is already following in the footsteps of its father by being a good "grower," having gained two pounds in a week.

Schroeter was very busy the past week with a large store decoration, using hundreds of Beauties, roses and carnations, as well as a number of ear-loads of palms and baskets.

Sullivan was very busy Sunday with a decoration in the millinery department of one of our largest stores.

Robert Flowerday, Jr., is again back in Detroit, having given up his position in St. Louis.

The Detroit Florists' Club's bowling team has accepted a challenge from the West Side Club's bowling team to play Thursday, October 5. The florists will be represented by Wm. Dilger, Frank Holznagle, John Dunn, Robert Watson, and Norman Sullivan as captain.

Eugene Oestreicher, formerly with James Taylor at Mt. Clemens, but now located at North Milwaukee, Wis., paid us a visit this week. Other visitors were Arthur Zirkmann, representing M. Rice & Co.; Leopold Oesternei, representing Siebrecht & Son; William R. Degner, of Cleveland, O. H. S.

ST. PAUL.

A Wedding Celebration.

Wednesday, September 20, the florists of St. Paul had a great time celebrating the wedding of Miss Dora Puvogel and Wm. Strehlow, our expert violet grower. The ceremony took place at 6 o'clock in the evening at St. Paul's church, with O. Hiersekorn as best man and his sister-in-law as bridesmaid. Two hours later the florists assembled at the couple's new residence, every one expecting a "hot time." A first-class supper and liquids of excellent quality put everybody into a high degree of gayety and joy. The German singing society, Concordia, and a double quartet let loose and "Billy" Swanson and C. Bussjaeger furnished the band and Terpsichore was the god of the evening; they all wanted to dance and Carl Haugen, the dancing master, had his hands full. Carl Vogt made the wedding speech and extended congratulations in fine style.

Those present were numerous and pretty, to mention the florists only. They collected and bought a fifty-dollar leather couch and besides everyone sent his own present. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. O. Hiersekorn and sister; Mr. and Mrs. H. Puvogel, Mr. and Mrs. F. Franke, Mr. and Mrs. H. Krinke, just returned from their old country trip; Mr. and Mrs. C. Bussjaeger; Mr. and Mrs. Aug. Vogt, Mr. and Mrs. J. Haupt, Messrs. Haugen and Swanson, Carl Vogt, the wedding orator, and about seventy-five more friends.

Various Notes.

Business is rather slow and only that several of our most prominent citizens died unexpectedly helped our storekeepers to get rid of some stock.

INDIANAPOLIS.

The Indianapolis merchants and florists are preparing to boom the flower show throughout Indiana, Ohio and Illinois. Financial backing does not seem to be lacking, as subscriptions to the premium list are heavier than in former years. Indianapolis being the center of the central flower growing section, no trouble is anticipated in filling Tomlinson hall to overflowing. Such growers as the E. G. Hill Co., of Richmond; W. J. & M. S. Vesey, of Fort Wayne; F. Dorner & Sons Co., of Lafayette, and Gunnar Teilmann, of Marion; Stuart & Haugh, of Anderson, and W. W. Coles, of Kokomo, are preparing to send their choice stock to Indianapolis.

The scheme for decorating Tomlinson hall is being worked out by Edward Bertermann and assistants. Special oriental scenery is being prepared for the stage and contracts are let for many thousands of electric lights. The New Castle people

All the railroads leading to Indianapolis have been requested to grant a rate of one fare for the round trip over the state.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

Business shows a slight improvement this week, lots of funeral work helping out to a considerable extent. Roses are improving. Some very fine Beauties, Maids and Kaisers are to be had and are bringing good prices. Carnations are making their appearance, but are rather small as yet, owing to the excessive heat we are having.

Jacob Schulz's new store is nearly ready for occupancy.

Nanz & Neuner will move in their new store about October 15.

A. R. Baumer has been making a beautiful display of cut gladioli mixed with Boston ferns.

Mrs. C. W. Reimers, on Fourth avenue, has made a handsome display in her window, of American Beauties.

Mrs. C. B. Thompson reports trade to be satisfactory.

F. C. Haupt has remodeled the interior of his store and has the finest furnished store in the south.

J. E. Marrett has a fine house of carnations.

C. W. Reimer's place, out on Hite avenue, is in excellent shape. He is cutting some of the best Beauties that are coming in this market.

Mrs. Catherine Lichtefeld, mother of Henry Lichtefeld, died suddenly on the night of September 8, of apoplexy. She was in her eightieth year. The funeral took place on September 11, at St. Martin's Catholic church, and was attended by a large circle of friends. The body was interred at St. Michael's cemetery. The floral designs were many and beautiful. HY. LICHTEFELD.

WICHITA, KAS.

Charles P. Mueller, one of Wichita's best known citizens, has been established in the florists' business for twenty-two years, and during this time has built up an extensive trade. His place is located at East Ninth street and Hydraulic avenue, where he has this summer erected a very large addition to his glass, to be ready for occupancy by November 15. This will give him 22,000 square feet under glass, being constructed of Louisiana cypress with double strength glass, all supports being of iron piping set in cement, and equipped with the best steam heating plant that money could buy. Mr. Mueller has found by years of experience that hydrant water was quite injurious to delicate plant life, so to get the best results he installed his own water system from his own wells and equipped the entire place with a pneumatic air pressure water system and has a reserve tank that is twenty-four feet long and four feet in diameter that he can obtain a pressure up to 150 pounds if so desired.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y.

The regular monthly meeting of the Tarrytown Horticultural Society was held on the evening of Tuesday, September 26, over thirty members being present. The monthly prize donated by John Featherstone, for the best exhibit of dahlias, was won by James Ballantyne, who staged a fine collection of well grown flowers. The F. R. Pierson Co. made a very interesting exhibit of a number of the newer varieties of dahlias and John Featherstone a pretty exhibit of tuberous rooted begonias.

James R. Scott gave a very interesting and instructive lecture on "Leaves, PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

The warm weather has brought us an abundance of fine outdoor flowers, dahlias leading. The way these flowers come into the wholesalers and go out, many of them, in the original boxes, is an encouraging sign of the growth of our business. Chrysanthemums are slowly increasing, with indications that the supply will not equal the demand for another week. Glory of Pacific, Polly Rose, Mrs. George Kalb, Opah and a new yellow variety are the sorts seen this week. Carnations are improving very decidedly.

The tone of the market is better; prices are low and there is a surplus, but a great quantity of stock is sold daily.

Dahlias.

Samuel S. Pennock submits the following list of dahlias, believing that for cut flower purposes they are the best:

Crimson Century, Nymphaea, pinkish white; Ami Barrillet, White Century, Record, striped Century; Prof. Mansfield, red or yellow mixed; Frantz Litz, semi-double, crimson; March of Beebe, May Loomis, Scarlet Century, Sindolt, pink and white; General Butler, Gaillard, scarlet; Denver, yellow and red; Standard Bearer, St. George, single yellow; Pres. Vilger, Queen of Belgians, John Thorpe, Henry Patrick, Scarlet Century, Livoni, Twentieth Century, Mrs. H. J. Jones, Penelope, pinkish white, double; Mrs. Keith, Lyndhurst, Wm. Agnew, John Ellitch, Carol, Gorgeous, C. Bruton, Arabella, Kriemhilde, Perle d'Or.

Mr. Pennock asks opinions of dahlia experts on the best varieties for cut flowers.

Death of Thos. Butler.

It is with deep regret that I record the tragic death of Thomas Butler, which occurred last Friday at Rosemont station, on the main line of the Pennsylvania railroad. A train accident, so dreadful that it is enough to say it was probably painless, has taken from us a familiar figure, whose cheery voice and kindly smile will be missed by many. Mr. Butler was an Englishman, first known here as a private gardener in Germantown. About eighteen years ago he purchased six acres of ground at Wyndmoor, where he grew early vegetables, some berries and had a small dairy. He was next door neighbor to the firm of Lonsdale & Burton and, remarking, as he has often told me, that he had to work hard while they took it easy, he gradually turned his vegetable frames into greenhouses and soon became a successful cut flower grower. He was successful with La

Thomas Butler.

France rose and one season in particular his Brunners were the finest in the Philadelphia market. He had, however, a bad year or two, fell behind and was obliged to part with his place. After another change, for a year or more Mr. Butler went into the employ of H. Waterer, seedsman, where he made a decided success, his experience as a grower being useful in his work among the gardeners. Mr. Butler was fond of saying in his jolly way, "Mr. Waterer would be a rich man today if he had secured me ten years ago."

The funeral services were held on Monday from his late home on Mount Pleasant avenue, Germantown.

The Chester Valley.

Henry Lynch, vice-president of the Dingee & Conard Co., had promised that P. Joseph Lynch, secretary and treasurer of the same great company, would be there and P. Joseph was not there. It was a rash promise, made in the enthusiasm of the moment, and now it was broken. In justice, however, to the v. p. I am bound to say that "furzino" it is the only promise broken by him. He has promised roses to thousands and tens of thousands of customers all over the country and the promises have been faithfully kept. The exception proves the rule. I do not know whether P. J. Lynch was closing the deal for the brief remaining bit of Telford road still needed, or whether he was "ponying up" at the West Grove postoffice for all those catalogues that now go out in bulk. I use this word advisedly. The company's officials say that there are from 10,000 to 15,000 of them daily.

To return, P. J. Lynch was not there, so David had not the opportunity to crack jokes and indulge in sparkling repartee with the s. and t. Henry Lynch was there; Howard Courtney was there; Edward Parker was there; a host, indeed, who showed the visitors "the home of the rose" with all the honors. In the offices the pretty girls were getting off catalogues in a way to bewilder one. Jonathan was bewildered. The catalogue is looked upon with reverence, for through it the great big world is reached, not only the western hemisphere, but the eastern, too. In cabinets are the cards properly indexed and classified, an invaluable asset.

When John Sullivan, of Detroit, was here on his way home from the convention, he experienced some painful moments when looking at these cards. There he saw the names of many neighbors in his far-away home who should have been faithful to him, lured away by the siren voice of that catalogue. Those cards are simplicity itself, just the name and address, with certain cabalistic marks indicative of the blood's color, so to speak, each in its own place.

The Ericsson pumps were working steadily away in a long shed, a shed that was so fresh after its summer furbishing that it reminded David of his nice work-room at home, while Jonathan wished his shed were like it and vowed that it should be soon. The propagating was under way, Mr. Parker heading a force of men who were taking and making rose cuttings. Hybrid sorts are not much favored at this season, the bulk of the stock now going into the sand being of tea blood, more or less.

The catalogue was referred to and from its pages was gleaned the fact that the Baby Rambler has the place of honor, while to Maman Cochet in four separate colors was accorded the distinction of a fine plate for the best outdoor rose. Queen of Edgely is largely disseminated at a price a little higher than that asked for American Beauty, a fact which will certainly please Harry C. Geiger should he chance to read these notes. Mr. Parker said that they desired to have 350,000 young roses rooted before New Year's. A part of these were already in small pots. More were in the sand outside. The wood then under the knife was going into the benches under glass. The general health of the plants was excellent. Chrysanthemums, geraniums and a general assortment of soft-wooded plants and shrubbery made up the assortment.

Time to go came all too soon. Cheered by a hearty handshake from the vice-president and from Mr. Courtney, the visitors, reinforced by Mr. Parker, proceeded on their journey.

(To be continued.)

Various Notes.

The October meeting of the Florists' Club was held on Tuesday evening. The officers elected for the ensuing year were: President, Thomas B. Meehan; vice-president, Fred Hahman; secretary, Edwin Lonsdale; treasurer, J. William Colfesh. A strong combination.

William Berger, of Germantown, had the decorations for the launching of the Mississippi last Saturday. The banquet hall was decorated with choice palms. Beauties and dahlias were largely used on the tables.

William J. Moore is selling dahlias by the thousands. He reports the demand is for the best varieties. The Millbrook Lea Greenhouses are beginning to send him some of their fine carnations.

Phil was shown exceedingly nice carnations this week at W. J. Baker's, E. Bernheimer's and the Philadelphia Cut Flower Co., the best varieties being Enchantress, Queen and Fair Maid.

W. E. McKissick reports a good demand for wild smilax.

Edward Reid had the first yellow chrysanthemums of the season on Monday.

T. A. Smith, of the H. F. Michell Co., says the first shipment of Japanese long-iflorums are in and out.

Oyster Bay claims two of our most strenuous workers, James T. Clark and Theodore Roosevelt.

Myers & Samtman are sending many of their celebrated Beauties to Pittsburgh.

"The Ideal Salesman" has proved an unexpected success. The judge will have a lively time.

The Leo Niessen Co. has a remarkably strong list of growers of what may be termed the staple flowers. In many cases these growers are virtually specialists, with large areas of glass, a sign of high quality and quantity.

William Swayne, of Kennett Square, sent his first chrysanthemums, Mrs. George Kalb, to W. J. Baker on Monday.

Dumont & Co. have put the finishing touches on their improvements, a pair of evergreens at the door. Their place is very attractive.

Eugene Bernheimer is having a good sale for autumn foliage. PHIL.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

The close of the month finds the market in fair condition, but business is still a little irregular. Roses are more plentiful and demand is a little lighter than last week. Carnations were never of better quality for so early in the season and demand continues very satisfactory. Now that asters are over, dahlias have a better show and are moving very well, but do not command a very high price; 50 cents to $1 per hundred buys the best. Some shipments of chrysanthemums have been received, but not of very good quality, the price being $1.50 per dozen. "Green goods" are not over plentiful.

The windows of our large department stores are making a very handsome display with artificial autumn foliage and also some very fine arrangements in artificial flowers.

On September 29 fire originating next door was communicated to R. L. Graham's flower store at 622 Aisquith street, which was completely destroyed, inflicting a loss of several hundred dollars upon Mr. Graham.

A question asked by one of the negro customers at one of our busy florists' was: "How many American Beauty roses can you get for 5 cents?" A. F.

WE have been very greatly disappointed at the backwardness of our crops but we are now ready to supply, and in a few days shall have quantities in yellow and white. Send along your orders.

BUFFALO.

Supt. John F. Cowell, of South park, is preparing for one of the largest and finest chrysanthemum shows ever held in this city, or probably any other city. The show will begin about November 10 and will continue for about two or three weeks. It will be held, as usual, at South park, the so-called Albright conservatory having been reserved for the event this year.

Supt. Cowell, who is ultra-conservative regarding anything he does, is thoroughly enthusiastic regarding this exhibition and goes so far as to say that the approaching show will be more extensive than ever and will include specimens of far better quality than have ever been shown before. Not less than 1,200 plants will be shown.

The first chrysanthemum show ever made by the city in the municipal greenhouses at South park was held about eight years ago. That was when the flower was on the crest of the first wave of its popularity, and hundreds of Buffalonians went to the greenhouses and saw the display. The entire exhibit of that year, however, consisted of only 100 plants.

In the ensuing eight years Supt. Cowell worked steadily to improve the quality, and each year marked an important advance, with the result that this year's exhibition is certain to surpass all others. It is believed that thousands of persons will view this year's exhibit where there were only hundreds in the first years. Within the past two or three years florists and lovers of flowers from all parts of western New York have made special pilgrimages to South park to see the chrysanthemum show, and this year, of course, will be no exception.

"There is a revival of interest in chrysanthemums," said Supt. Cowell in discussing the proposed display with a newspaper man. "This revival, no doubt, is due to the results that have been achieved in cultivating the flowers in Australia.

"Several years ago the chrysanthemum apparently reached the height of its development in this country and in Europe. The growers could not produce larger flowers or get better results in colors than they were getting. That brought the cultivation of the chrysanthemum to a standstill so far as further progress was concerned.

"Just about that time some genius took up the cultivation of the flowers under entirely new climatic conditions in Australia. It was just an experiment, but it was a happy one. The seedlings sent to Australia developed beyond all expectations and in due time plants were returned from that country to Europe and the United States, and these plants did wonders when they were grown in the two original chrysanthemum growing countries.

"Some of the chrysanthemums which we will show at South park are these Australian products. In many cases the flowers, when their petals are spread out, measure fifteen inches across. The colors, too, are unusually striking, and we will be able to show practically every color except blue."

"Why not blue?"

"Well, because there are no blue chrysanthemums. Growers of flowers have tried for years and years to develop a blue chrysanthemum, but they have not yet met with success. Progress, however, is being made in this direction and we may yet see a blue chrysanthemum, just as we may yet see a blue rose, although there is none now.

"Very few genera of plants have red, blue and yellow colors. If we have the blue, the yellow is lacking, and vice versa. Usually we find two of the colors but not the third. Analogy leads us to believe that we will yet get a blue rose and a blue chrysanthemum; for instance, we now have the blue phlox, and we are getting close to the blue carnation."

ELECTRIC HEAT.

Electrical heat has not yet been applied to commercial greenhouse establishments although some small private conservatories have been so heated. Electricity has long been used for heating street cars and for other heating purposes when conditions were extraordinary, but the expense as compared to steam or water under ordinary conditions is an effectual bar. The cost of electric power varies from 1 cent to 5 cents per kilowatt. When electric power is sold at the lower figure, electrical engineers estimate that the cost of heating a greenhouse by such means would be nearly six times the cost of heating by steam or hot water. Some day the cost of electric power will be very much cheaper than at present, but there is no immediate prospect of any change which will bring electrical heat down to an economical commercial basis.

WALDEN, N. Y.—Wm. Ballin has been appointed receiver for the Sunnyside Greenhouses. W. K. Kesteloo filed a petition in bankruptcy for the firm, scheduling its liabilities at $1,307 and assets at $565. C. V. Bunting, the partner, refused to join in the petition.

KANSAS CITY.

There was a meeting of the committee of florists interested in the approaching flower show at Convention hall on October 2 for the purpose of finishing the premium list. L. A. Goodman, who has assumed the superintendence of the show, presided at the meeting.

Mr. Goodman said concerning the show: "I should say from the great volume of correspondence that has been coming in from the east, as well as elsewhere, that the show this year is going to be, by great odds, the most successful in every way that has been held here. We shall have every detail as to the premiums arranged soon."

At the last meeting of the Kansas City Florists' Bowling Club twenty-three members were present. The club now boasts of thirty-six members. Active preparations are under way to entertain visiting florists during the coming flower show. George M. Kellogg has donated a valuable loving cup to be rolled for.

WEATHER IN CORN STATES.

The U. S. weather bureau's weekly crop summary says: "Highly favorable weather has prevailed throughout the principal corn states. An exceptionally large and fine yield of corn is now assured for the much greater part of the corn belt and only a very small part of the crop in the north central portion, estimated at from two to five per cent of the total, remains exposed to injury from frost, and this is maturing rapidly."

CHICAGO SEED MARKET.

On the Chicago Board of Trade, October 3, flaxseed ruled firm with northwestern markets. No. 1 northwestern was 2 cents higher, at $1.03, and No. 1, 97 cents. December was 99 cents nominal. Receipts were two cars here, forty-four at Minneapolis, and 138 at Duluth.

Timothy seed was heavy, country lots ranging from $2 to $3.20, and March, $3.47½ bid. October was $3.35. October clover seed was firm for spot contract at $12.75, and $10 to $12.50 for bag lots.

AROMATIC SEEDS.

In the matter of the protest of H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill., against the assessment of duty by the customs collector at Chicago the following important statement is made by General Appraiser Waite:

The merchandise covered by these protests consisted of various aromatic seeds, classified under the provision in paragraph 254, tariff act of 1897, for "seeds of all kinds not specially provided for," which the importers contend should have been classified free of duty under paragraph 548, relating to "drugs, such as . . . seeds, aromatic; . . . any of the foregoing which are drugs."

The importers submitted their protests without offering any evidence whatever in support of them, merely requesting the Board to ascertain the practice in classifying the same merchandise at the port of New York.

The pepper seed consists of the following named varieties: Sweet Mountain, Ruby King, Cayenne, Long Red Cayenne, Long Yellow, Golden Dawn, Celestial, Chile, Red Cluster, Tomato-shaped. The New York examiner of seeds, summoned in compliance with the importers' request, recognizes these as simply varieties of the common garden pepper, not raised for their seeds, and whose product is eaten as table vegetables or pickles. He states that none of the varieties named is used as a drug.

The other alleged aromatic seeds are of the following varieties: Balm, sweet basil, borage, catnip (or catmint), henbane, hyssop, sweet marjoram, pennyroyal, rosemary, rue, saffron, sage, tansy, thyme and wormwood. All these seeds probably have aromatic properties since the herbs grown from them are among the best known aromatic plants. It is common knowledge also that these plants are used medicinally to a greater or less extent, though it is not clear that some of them, like sweet marjoram, sage and thyme, are not chiefly used as condiments. But while reference to the United States Dispensatory and other standard authorities shows that the leaves, stems, tops, flowers, or stigmas of most if not all of the plants named are used medicinally or for making infusions, decoctions, oils, etc., used in medicine, we have failed to find a single instance where the seeds of these plants are spoken of as being in official use as drugs. Frequent reference in the United States Dispensatory to aromatic seeds which are themselves used as drugs makes the omission in these cases significant. Thus, parsley seeds are mentioned as drugs in that authority (p. 1570, 18th ed.), as are also dill seeds (p. 174), cardamom seeds (p. 332), fennel seeds (p. 640), and fenugreek seeds (p. 1818), the last four named plants being cultivated chiefly if not wholly for their seeds. The Board has held parsley and dill seeds to be free as aromatic seeds "which are drugs," under said paragraph 548. In re Peek & Velsor, G. A. 5272 (T. D. 24204).

It appears from the testimony of the examiner of seeds at New York that aromatic seeds of the varieties in controversy in this case, with the exception of the pepper seeds, are at this port admitted free of duty under paragraph 548. The evidence does not satisfy us, however, that the practice at New York is founded upon definite information that the seeds in controversy are sold by drug houses or used medicinally. We find no warrant in paragraph 548 for exempting aromatic seeds which are not themselves used as drugs, notwithstanding they may grow herbs and plants used in medicine. The Board is not justified in reversing the decision of the Chicago collector, which is presumed to have been based upon adequate evidence, because of variance in practice with New York, unless the practice at the latter port is shown to be supported by the facts. We conclude that the importer has not sustained the burden resting upon him to prove that the seeds in question are in themselves drugs, within the meaning of the statute. Board decision in re Burpee & Co., Abstract 2374, (T. D. 25499), is substantially to the same effect.

The protests also relate to two varieties of seeds invoiced as kohlrabi and scorzonera, which the examiner at New York states are well-known vegetable seeds, whose product is used exclusively as a vegetable.

The protests are overruled and the collector's decision affirmed.

PIPING.

I have three houses 20x50 and would like to know if I have piped them right for Philadelphia climate. I have in each house a 1½-inch pipe on the posts on each side, near the gutter, and two other pipes in the peak of the roof. The outside houses each have an extra pipe along the wall near the ground. J. H. L.

I do not understand the arrangement of pipes in your houses but note that the pipes indicated are practically all either near or in the angle made by the sash bars. In general this is not the best position for heating pipes to get the greatest efficiency from them. Sixteen pipes are indicated in the three houses, two more in each of the sides than in the center house. This is wise, but the sixteen 1½-inch pipes are not sufficient for severe weather. Each of the side houses should have a 2-inch flow pipe in the gable under the ridgepole, fifteen to eighteen inches below it, and ten 1½-inch returns. The middle house should have a 2-inch riser placed as above described and eight 1½-inch returns. This is estimated on a 60 degree basis for cold weather. The plan calls for twenty-eight 1½-inch return pipes and three 2-inch flows. L. C. C.

A COIL HEATER.

I am thinking of building a coil heater out of 2-inch or 1½-inch pipe. I intend to use six runs eight feet long, so arranged that the heat passes as in a return flue boiler, there being three coils in the fire chamber. How many feet of 3-inch pipe will this heat to 50 degrees in zero weather? How many square feet of grate will be needed and what size of flue. G. O. K.

The heater you figure constructed from 2-inch pipe will have eighty-nine square feet of heating surface, which is capable of carrying 712 square feet of radiation, which is equal to 775 lineal feet of 3-inch pipe. If you use the same number of 1½-inch pipes of the same length your heater will have correspondingly less capacity. A grate with two and a half square feet in it should be sufficient for this amount of heating surface. A 6-inch flue will answer if hard coal is used;

Schmaus Bros. are building a new house 30x150, to be used for plants. They are the largest growers of plants in this vicinity. Their roses and carnations are looking well and promise good returns during the coming season.

C. L. Brunson & Co. have everything in good shape. Their chrysanthemums are fine; roses and carnations also are in first-class shape.

Robert E. Rudolph has added a new house 18x125, planted to carnations. All his place, excepting one house, is planted to carnations which he is going to wholesale this season.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

All of the strictly first-class stock coming in is finding ready sale, as well as part of the second grade. Dahlias are fine and find a ready market, since asters have dropped out. Taken as a whole the cut flower business has been very satisfactory, and things in general are assuming that steady appearance which will last until next summer.

Various Notes.

Jacob Gerwig, who has made the rounds of all the wholesale houses, has now settled down with the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co.

Last spring we spoke of a number of large places which were to be built here this summer, but it never got stronger than wind. The presumption now is the cold coin was not back of them.

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed against Polites Brothers, Greek florists and confectioners, at the corner of Fifth avenue and Market street, and with a stand in the Arcade, with the usual result that several of the wholesalers were caught for fair sums.

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Elicker, of Homestead, celebrated the twentieth anniversary of their wedding last Monday. Quite a number of friends participated and spent a pleasant evening.

B. E. Blackley, of Homestead, has disposed of his store to a company. The names of those interested have not been made known.

W. A. Clarke, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., who is a Shriner, attended the Shriners' outing at Bear Run and says it is the first time he ever appreciated the saying "free as air," for anything you saw and wanted and was able to carry was yours for the taking.

W. R. Macbuis, of Lock No. 4, Pa., has just completed several new houses, which are planted in carnations and looking fine.

Ed McCollum, of the Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, made good as a football player. His team won their first game Saturday from a much heavier team.

L. I. Neff is cutting the finest Lawson and Enchantress carnations seen so far this season.

Mrs. E. A. Williams has a very attractive stand in the exposition and is the only one of the trade represented there.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel McClements were visitors in the east last week.

J. W. Glenn, of Kittanning, the tallest florist in this section, standing about seven feet, was a visitor with the Hep-tasophs last week at the exposition. He is as good natured as he is big.

These beautiful Sundays are bringing the florists together. J. W. Ludwig and wife, and T. P. Langhans spent last Sunday with Uncle John Wyland, and say his carnations are in the usual grand condition. Uncle John has a beautiful home.

Hoo-Hoo.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Geny Bros. are adding one new house to their range and will make a large number of repairs; twenty-six city building permits having been required before the work could begin.

PACIFIC COAST.

SAN MATEO, CAL.—H. G. Hardy is building a store with fifty feet front and twenty-five feet deep. He formerly wholesaled his cut but now proposes to go into the retail business.

SANTA BARBARA, CAL.—P. Riedel, formerly of Coronado, has leased the Montecito Nurseries here. He has about 10,000 feet of glass for cut flowers and winter tomatoes and about thirteen acres in general nursery stocks. Business is steadily increasing in this vicinity and his prospects are very good.

BURLINGAME, CAL.—Thomas W. Breen, foreman for P. C. Meyer & Co., the Glenwood Nursery, is the father of a ten-pound baby boy of whom he is vastly more proud than of the fine condition of the very up-to-date place of which he has charge. A house 25x230 planted to the Queen of Edgely rose is not to be equaled on this coast. The plant has in all 140,000 square feet of glass.

PLANTS GROWN TOO SOFT.

Some of our largest plant growers make the mistake of keeping their palm houses too close and dark, and as a consequence much of the stock that will be offered for sale through the retailers this season will be entirely unfit for house plants. The demand of the public has, of course, much to do with this state of affairs. It is so customary for the buyer to expect a big plant for a very small price that to fill this want the grower has resorted to every device to bring forth something very showy, if not durable, at a low figure.

Many of the retailers, after having had poor success in handling goods of this nature, do not keep a stock on hand, but fill up their stores only on the approach of Christmas and when the plants left unsold after that time are disposed of or die no more are bought for another season.

The great trouble with this class of stock is that it is grown too soft. I visited one of the large growing establishments in this neighborhood within the past week and find this idea being carried out more than ever. For instance, Kentia Belmoreana growing in 4-inch pots, probably two years old from seed, stood twenty-four inches high, the leaves drawn up out of all proportion by the heat and moisture. Those growing in 5-inch pots averaged from thirty to thirty-six inches, standing on benches as close together as possible. The man in charge told me these were being especially grown for the Christmas trade and many thousands of them would be used by the San Francisco florists during holiday week.

This is a great mistake and, although all our growers do not force their stock in this manner, there are many who do. Very often the retailer, who usually is not very well informed about the growing of house plants, imagines, after he has had the stock a week or two and sees that it is gradually turning yellow, that it was in poor condition when delivered to him. But I have seen a great deal of it and the difference in the temperature of a cold, draughty store and hot, close greenhouses is too marked and the poor plants quickly begin to fade.

THE PRIDE OF CALIFORNIA. THE GRANDEST OF PINK CARNATIONS.

A shade deeper in color than Lawson, blooms four to four and one-half inches across, full and regular. Stems long and strong. Does not burst the calyx. Growth free and easy. A prolific bloomer. Its flowers wholesale for a higher price than any other carnation in the San Francisco market. (See illustration and full description in Florists' Review of June 8, 1905.) Orders for rooted cuttings booked now and filled in rotation beginning Jan. 1, 1906, at $3.00 per 12; $15.00 per 100; $120.00 per 1000.

It is hardly necessary to add that the customers who purchase the same article have no better success with it and the poor retailer has considerable trouble on his hands from that source. I have mentioned kentias especially, as they are the best seller, but much other stock is grown in the same fashion. The various varieties of nephrolepis, usually quite hardy here, have within recent years been forced so that the retailers do not dare to touch them. Rubbers, latanias, seaforthias and other half-hardy stock has been served to them in the same fashion.

Of course the desire to grow a tall plant in the least possible time, and the further chance to dispose of it at a little less price than some other dealer, is at the bottom of all the troubles. It is a short-sighted policy, however, and one of the reasons why the public has taken so to the idea of using artificial palms in decorations. When a customer, after several trials, finds out that it is impossible to keep a house plant alive over a couple of weeks, I find they very often get into the habit of filling their jardinières with those hideous monstrosities I have just mentioned. PORTLAND, ORE. OCT 7.

We are still on good terms with everybody and our only grievance is that flowers are not as good as the demand. After a three months' drought we welcomed a heavy downpour a week ago and since then the weather has been feverish, with frequent showers, and outdoor stock is waterlogged and serviceable only when not subjected to close inspection. Our rural florists, who have but little glass and depend largely on the summer trade, have had a prosperous season. With irrigation facilities they were able to keep the market well supplied with useful decorative material, which found liberal Indoor stock is coming to the rescue and there is a demand for all of it at a good price. Roses are especially fine and showing splendid growth. Carnations are not yet entitled to honorable mention. Violets are a little obstinate and only an occasional bunch is seen. Chrysanthemums are late this year and we do not expect any good blooms for three weeks yet.

While the weather is still a trifle disagreeable, the attendance at the fair is increasing each day and great events are promised that will be of interest to the florists, from now until the fair closes, October 15.

I am planning to grow carnations benched in a shade house covered with light cheese-cloth. We grow almost everything in such houses here, only varying the thickness of the covering material.

We can propagate in very warm weather here by running a pipe along the ridge outside, bored full of small holes, into which string is lightly wedged. The water drips from the string to the cloth roof and spreads out very thin, just enough to keep the roof damp, and evaporation does the rest.

In this manner one has a very cheap natural refrigerator by which the temperature may be kept low enough to keep butter hard in the very hottest weather. I should think something like this would be fine in the east in summer, yet one never sees them there.

While I have worked in several places in the east, this is my first experience for myself, and I am very glad one has the privilege of seeking aid from the REVIEW, which is worth several dollars a year, instead of the one it costs.

The Market.

Business is at a very low ebb. There is nothing stirring in a social way and funeral orders are few and far between. Flowers are scarce. Mums are not yet to be had in quantity, sweet peas are very short of stem, and carnations and roses are slowly coming in season. There is stock enough offered, however, to fill all wants and from the appearance of everything it will take a few nights' frost to start things going in good shape. The weather has turned warm again, although the appearances were for rain during the early part of the week.

Various Notes.

The estate of John Rock, late president of the California Nursery Co., has been ordered distributed to his two children. The value has been placed at $55,000.

H. Yoshiike will give up the growing of general nursery stock and devote himself in future to carnations. He has several promising seedlings this season.

Frank Pelicano is still rustivating in the country and will not return to town for several weeks.

The Cox Co. has received its supply of Holland bulbs. A good trade is reported in that line.

A matter of interest to horticulturists is the successful moving of a large palm from San Mateo to Redwood City. J. W. Poole, of the latter place, completed the work this week. The tree is forty feet in height and about five feet in diameter and was estimated to weigh, with the ball of earth, about forty tons. Twenty-eight horses hauled the tree on a large truck, taking about two days. The tree came from the residence of Alvinza Hayward, at San Mateo, and has been replanted near the residence of Park Commissioner W. J. Dingee, at Redwood City.

W. H. Mann, of Pinole, is in town on a short visit.

Miss Charlotte Williams, the Post street decorator, reports several large wedding decorations for the near future.

Fred L. Smith has returned from a month's trip to Portland and Seattle.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., E. Albertson, Bridgeport, Ind.; Vice-Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas., C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 31st annual convention will be held at Dallas, Texas, June, 1906.

THE American Civic Association and the National Council of Horticulture are in session at Cleveland this week.

THOS. B. MEEHAN, of Meehan & Sons, Dreshertown, Pa., has been elected president of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia.

THE forty-fifth annual report of the board of park commissioners of Hartford, Conn., just to hand, is a very interesting volume.

H. DEN OUDEN & SON, Boskoop, Holland, are sending the American trade some excellent views in their nursery, established in 1869.

THE apple tree business is not all that it might have been this fall because of small crops and poor quality in the principal orcharding communities.

WHEN the Gilbertson Nursery Co., of St. Ansgar, removed to Mason City, Ia., it was with the promise that their property of some 200 acres should be free from city taxation for fifteen years. Now three other concerns insist that their property be set outside the city limits, and the upshot may be that the nursery will have to come in.

THE members of the American Pomological Society who made the trip through the Ozark fruit belt as the guests of the railroads of that section obtained an entirely new idea of the importance of that region to the fruit and nursery interests of the country. The United States and a considerable part of Europe now get a large part of their apples from Missouri and Arkansas.

SPRUCE SEED SOWN BROADCAST.

It is a matter of common observation that evergreen trees spring up readily in poplar groves, and hence a notion has become prevalent that spruce finds in such places good conditions for reproduction, and that spruce forests might be started by scattering the seed under the poplar trees. To put the matter to a test, the Forest, Fish and Game Commission of New York, sowed in 1903 about a bushel of native spruce seed in the poplar groves near Aiden Lair, Essex county, New York. The ground was quite well covered with poplars which ranged in diameter from four to ten inches. There were no small evergreens beneath them, nor were there any large spruce trees nearby from which seed might be shed. Therefore, any spruce trees that have begun to grow there during the past three years may be considered as having come from the seed sown.

The seed was scattered on the fallen leaves, on decaying wood, and especially on all spots where the mineral soil was exposed, and these were quite numerous. About eight quarts of seed were put on an acre. The seed received immediately several showers, but from April 4 to June 11 no rain fell in the Adirondacks.

In July, 1904, an examination of the ground was made. Where mineral soil had been exposed, and on rotten wood, the little trees were doing quite well, in many places four or five trees being found on a square foot. In other places, however, especially where the leaves were thick, they were rather scarce. But over the whole ground they were probably sufficiently numerous to make an evergreen forest if they all continue to grow.

In August of this year the groves were again examined. The little spruces were still alive, and seemed to be about as numerous as they were last year.

It is too early yet to form a judgment as to the ultimate success of the experiment, and we shall probably learn that the seed must at least reach the mineral soil.

THE SEASON'S OPPORTUNITY.

C. E. Gardner, vice-president and treasurer of the Gardner Nursery Company, Osage, Iowa, writes as follows: "It is our opinion that the nursery advertiser who does not increase his advertising appropriation this season and who does not put special energy and thought into his catalogue and follow-up work, will lose a large amount of business he otherwise might have enjoyed. In our mail order department we keep careful watch of general conditions in all parts of the country and one of the very best guides we can get is our own customers' letters. From this point of view the prospects for the coming season are very bright. Bumper crops almost everywhere and prices will rule high enough to give the average farmer plenty of money for the necessities and some to spare for other purposes.

In our own case our company is planning to double our last year's appropriation for advertising and give much closer attention to catalogue and follow-up plans than ever before. We will add some new papers to the list of mediums used and will also use larger space than heretofore."

PEACH STOCK FOR PLUMS.

The majority of stone fruits grown in South Africa, such as apricots, peaches, plums and nectarines, are worked either on stocks of the peach, peach almond (a cross between the peach and almond), or the almond. Plums worked on either of the above stocks make much finer growth, are more fruitful and succeed better from all points of view than if worked on the plum stock. The only variety that does not do so well on the peach is the Green Gage. The peach has one great advantage in that it does not "sneak up" like the plum. Some are under the impression that the peach stock has a dwarfing effect on the tree; such is not the case. They grow far more vigorously on the above-mentioned stocks. In some districts of the dry Karroo, and especially where the land is constantly irrigated, trees worked on the almond are preferable; they do not suffer from root rot, as is sometimes the case with the peach.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

PEONIES FOR CUT FLOWERS.

I would be pleased to have a list of the best kinds of peonies, all colors, that will be suitable for cut flowers and that will be in bloom early enough in southwestern Pennsylvania to use for Decoration day.

I. V. K.

Peonies are not to be depended on in western Pennsylvania for Memorial day; sometimes the Old Red is ready; sometimes not. Last year the Pittsburgh market did not have local peonies until the first week in June. Usually Memorial day supplies in all cut flower markets are from southern growers. As to varieties, the peony committee of the S. A. F. recommends the following as the cream of the immense collections for trade purposes: Festiva maxima, Pottsi alba, M. Jules Elie, Livingston, Delicatissima, Richardson's Rubra Superba, Couronne d'Or, Louis van Houtte and Delachei. Others would say that for cut flower purposes such sorts as Queen Victoria should be included, and objection might be made to some of those in the above list on the ground that they are among the newer varieties and therefore too high priced for planting in quantity. The objection, however, does not hold against Queen Victoria, which is probably more largely grown for cut flowers than is any other one variety.

MINEOLA, L. I.

The Queens-Nassau fair last week was a great success, both in point of exhibits and in attendance. The most striking feature of the main hall was the splendid pyramidal collection of seventy-five varieties of palms, ferns and decorative plants of John Lewis Childs, of Floral Park, which occupied the central stand under the dome and covered 250 square feet of space. Some of the big palms in the center rose to a height of twenty feet. Mr. Childs' general exhibit, which was tastefully arranged by Adolf Jaenicke, manager, comprised nearly or quite half the entire floral department. The display of fruit was the largest ever seen on the grounds and the display in the vegetable tent fully sustained the reputation of old Queens county as the home of market gardening.

The display of thirty-five varieties of evergreen trees by the Cottage Gardens Co., of Queens, was an attractive feature of the grounds. It included Colorado blue spruce, Japanese cypress, boxwood, arbor-vitæ, ten varieties of junipers, biotas, rhododendrons and a lot of deciduous trees. In the center was an Indian wigwam made of white birch from Michigan forests. Hicks & Son, of Westbury, also had an attractive exhibit of nursery stock.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

Business still continues fair, but it is not up to last year. Not only is the demand not up to last year's mark, but the supply of stock is also lacking. Better things are to be hoped for now that cooler weather is due.

Jewish New Year brought forth a little rush, which helped out greatly, but there is very little in prospect at present. It looks as if the chrysanthemum is required to start the flower-buying public at the winter gait, and now, as they are gradually becoming more plentiful, business will doubtless pick up.

The mums coming in are neither so very large nor so very good to look at but they are the first of the season and they sell. Roses are coming in heavily and some of them are very poor, being full of mildew. Carnations continue to improve in quality and their numbers are increasing. They sell out clean.

Asters are almost gone, and in their place is the dahlia. This beautiful flower is selling better each year and I believe that in a few years it will be right up with the aster as a seller. Gladioli also are done. There is lots of cosmos this year and the store-men all have their windows full of it. The supply of "greens" is about equal to the demand.

Various Notes.

Peter Weiland's partner, Mr. Olinger, is in the city looking for a house. He will bring his family here shortly and will then actively engage in the management of their wholesale house.

I regret to report the death of the mother of our brother florists, Fred and William Gear. Her death, while feared to be approaching, occurred when least expected and was a great shock to her family. Interment took place on Wednesday.

Dr. Howald and wife, of Atlanta, Ga., were callers Sunday. They were on their way to Delaware, O.

W. N. Rudd, of Chicago, and E. J. Fancourt, of Philadelphia, were callers.

The next regular meeting of the Florists' Society will be held Saturday October 14, at 8 p. m. sharp. There will be a general discussion on our regular flower shows and all members are requested to be present and offer suggestions.

GODFREY ASCHMANN

OF AMERICA

Order now while the weather permits shipping. No lie—When you undertake anything, do it well or not at all. This is our motto adopted 10 years ago when we imported the first lot of this well known pot plant; the ARAUCARIA EXCELSA from Belgium. These everlasting green foliaged pot plants are growing more in favor by the tasteful plant buyers of this land from year to year. Please watch the growth of our importation during the last 10 years: first year 100, second 250, third 500, fourth 1000, fifth 2,000. This year (1905) which is the 10th anniversary of our first importation, our spring importation amounted to 5,000. All these are grown for us under contract by an Araucaria specialist in Belgium. I must say for the benefit of my customers that they were never before so nice and large for the money as this year. I herewith quote you special prices on these, in or out of:

Each 5½-in. pots, 10 to 12 in. high, 2 yrs. old, 3 tiers, $0.50
5½-in. pots, 13 to 15 in. high, 3 to 4 tiers, .60
6-in. pots, 16 to 18 in. high, 3 to 4 tiers, .75
6½-in. pots, 18 to 20 in. high, 4 to 5 tiers, 1.00
6½-in. pots, 20 to 24 in. high, 5 to 6 tiers, 1.25

CATALOG Upon Request

C. C. POLLWORTH CO., - - Milwaukee, Wis.

CAPACITY OF BOILER.

I am building a range of seven short-span connected houses, six of them each 13½x100, the other 20½x100, eleven feet to the ridge. I wish to grow carnations in Milwaukee climate. I have a No. 19 Hitchings boiler and a lot of 4-inch cast-iron pipe, but not enough for piping all. I would like to put in steam with same. What size of boiler will I need and how would you arrange the piping? Would it be good policy to arrange the 4-inch cast-iron pipe along the walls and carry the steam supply along the ridge and return under the benches? O. S.

You are undoubtedly fully aware that it is impracticable for you to use the 4-inch cast-iron pipe for steam heating. I infer that you wish to make a combination heating plant; i. e., you intend to install the hot water boiler you have and use the 4-inch cast-iron pipe in connection with this boiler for a part of the houses and to supplement this with steam to provide the additional heat required. Such a combination can undoubtedly be made but as you do not state the amount of 4-inch pipe you propose to use I can only base the answer to your question on the capacity of the boiler you have. To heat the plant with hot water 4,000 feet of radiation will be required. To heat it with steam 3,000 feet of radiation will suffice. Your No. 19 Hitchings boiler is rated to carry 2,300 square feet of radiation. According to this the boiler you have is about half as large as is required to do the work. L. C. C.

Our stock is grown from the best selected European strain, which has given satisfaction wherever grown. Fine plants from 2 1/4 inch pots ready for immediate shift, in blue and bright scarlet $3.00 per 100.
Thrifty plants from 3-in. pots, in white clear light pink, blue and bright scarlet, $5.00 per 100.

Field-Grown Asparagus Sprengerii

Those who have purchased our field-grown plants in the past are convinced that they are much superior to pot-grown, both for pots and bench culture.

When housed they immediately start into active growth, throwing up numerous growths which come to perfection much earlier than those from pots. Field culture adds to the vigor of the plants and an enormous crop of green is the result.

OIL TO PREVENT RUST.

The question of oiling or painting heating pipes to prevent rust has been discussed pro and con but is yet unsettled. Some weeks ago I had 2,000 feet of 2-inch pipe, new from the factory, thrown on the ground in the open air. The season here has been very wet and as a result the pipes were wet most of the time. On placing them in position for heating I find them rusted more or less (mostly more) except near the ends, where it is readily seen there had been oil of some kind. This oil was there as a result of machine work in threading at the factory and extended from three to eight feet from the ends. There is no sign of rust. I do not suppose this oil would withstand steam but I hardly think hot water heat would burn it off. Will some of the brethren state their observations on this point? The plumber tells me that the oil in question is lard oil.

S. C. T.

The lard oil which adheres to the pipes as the result of its use in threading the pipes will soon be dissipated by the heat of a normal hot water system. Such light oils cannot be relied upon to serve as a preventative of rust. If grease of any kind is to be used it must be one of the heavy fluids from the refinery or a mica grease. Asphaltum varnish is the best protection against rust but not a desirable material to use on radiating pipes.

PIPING THREE HOUSES.

I intend to build three houses 20x100 to heat with hot water to 52 degrees when it is 20 degrees below zero outside. How many feet of 1 1/4-inch pipe will it take?

T. W. B.

It will not be safe to use less than fourteen runs of 1 1/4-inch pipe in each of these houses if they are detached. If they are constructed on the ridge and furrow plan; i. e., connected and without partition walls, a little less piping can be used in the middle house.

DEFICIENT RADIATION.

For several years I heated my carnation house, which was 20x100 feet, with six lines of 2-inch pipe passing around under the benches. I rebuilt the house last fall and hung the six lines of pipe with hook plates on the walls, with about the same grade and I did not get heat enough though I used the same pipe and heater. Had I better take the pipe from the walls and lay them out horizontally under the benches? The climate is that of Maine. I have another house the same size with six lines of 2-inch pipe hung with hook plates on the walls but in the upper pipe and the fourth one down from the top the water does not circulate. These two pipes get warm only about ten feet from the heater. I cannot see anything to cause the water to stop in these pipes and not in the others. Can you?

Would you advise building a house 150 feet long that you were to heat with water, or would you build two houses each seventy-five feet? I have no room to extend one east and the other west from the heater but have plenty of room to the west and south. W. E. H.

I am not surprised that you were unable to maintain the temperature in a house 20x100 with six 2-inch pipes. Six 2-inch pipes 100 feet long, or 600 feet, is equivalent to 372 square feet of radiation, and to hold this house at 50 degrees it should have 610 square feet of radiation. You have a little less than two-thirds the heating surface necessary for this house. I fully believe you will get a more economical and satisfactory distribution of heat in the houses by placing the pipes under the benches instead of on the side walls. This plan is not always possible but whenever practicable it is well to follow it. The pipes which do not heat are probably air-bound and need a vent, or they may have a slight buckle in them, which impedes the circulation. In practice, with a gravity system, it is not advisable to carry hot water more than 100 feet. The houses seventy-five feet long would in my judgment be best if hot water heat is to be used. L. C. C.

PIPING FOR SMALL HOUSE.

How much 1½-inch pipe will it take to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees in a house 16x20 feet, double side walls, tarred and papered between? It runs north and south; south gable glass; eaves five feet, ridge seven feet. Will use hot water. Outside temperature zero. I expect to run the pipes under the benches and return to the heater the same way. C. E. E.

Three hundred lineal feet of 1½-inch pipe should be sufficient to give the temperature desired in this house. L. C. C.

One Of Our Struggles

We have just been struggling to overcome a prejudice—not ours—but a florist's. He wanted one of our houses—has for over three years—but he believed in the school of experience—took a full course (from what he admits on repairs and costs in chilled plants)—and then came to us to “talk price.” Came 900 miles to do it. He said: “You build good enough houses, all right, good as any one, maybe a lot better, but aren't you a little high-priced?”

We just went into the whole constructive thing with that man, from turning the sod to turning on the heat. Showed him the kind of things we put into our houses—told him how all our Cypress was air-dried two years before using—gave him a rough lead pencil sketch of the way we harnessed the heat in our boilers—underlined the little perfections that go to make our ventilating devices what they are; even told him our formula for mixing putty, and showed him the things we made it of—then we “talked price” again. We are working away at that man's house now; it will be ready a full month before he wants it, some time in February.

If you are thinking of a house, take it up with us NOW and we can have it ready when you are ready. Catalog L-G.

THE RICHMOND ROSE.

Something About Liberal Treatment.

A few months ago we told a number of people that Richmond rose would enjoy a "liberal" treatment. Recently we have heard of one or two cases of Richmond not growing vigorously "even though they had been given liberal treatment, as directed." An investigation of one case of this kind shows that the plants when received were potted into 3-inch, establishing quickly and growing vigorously in these pots. At the proper time they were shifted into 4-inch and, before having a chance to grow much in this pot, were planted in the bench.

All this is so commonplace to the careful grower as to be axiomatic, and its only bearing on the case in hand is to draw attention to the mistakes which were made later. The soil used for planting was a beautiful, heavy, fibrous loam which had been treated to a good dose of half rotted cow manure in the proportion of one to three. Excellent stock in excellent soil. But from this time on strict attention was paid to the hurt received from the raisers of Richmond, and "liberal" treatment was accorded them; that is to say, the entire mass of soil in the bench was heavily watered every few days. After two months (or about August 20) noting that the plants had grown but little and were making a rather weak break, a good dressing of bone meal was applied and followed by a mulching of cow manure. The heavy watering was continued, with the result that at present the plants are but little larger than when planted.

One result of advice given with the best of intentions and followed "not wisely but too well."

A Few Timely Hints.

Nevertheless, in response to your request, we will try to give a few hints on the handling of Richmond rose, drawing on an experience of three years with the variety. It is too late to make suggestions about summer culture; however, if the grower has only remembered that in transferring a plant from a 2-inch pot into the bench he is performing an operation equivalent to repotting that same 2-inch plant into a 12-inch or possibly 13-inch pot, and has treated them accordingly, then there is no doubt about their condition thus far. If even an inexperienced grower had repotted a plant as suggested from a 2-inch to a 12-inch pot, he would just naturally have been careful not to give too much water until the roots had filled the pot, and the plant had grown to a size in proportion. A depression around the plant and plenty of water applied in this depression, with none at all, or as little as possible, on the remainder of the soil, would have insured the desired result.

If properly handled, the plants of Richmond, even those received in May, should now be strong, vigorous plants, two to three feet in height, making heavy breaks, with a showing of ground shoots. If this is the case and the plants are in shallow soil they would thoroughly enjoy a mulch of manure not too fresh. This is not essential, especially if the soil was rich in the start.

Don't Cut Too Long Stems.

Several things are important, however, and not the least is to resist the temptation to cut blooms with big, long stems in early fall. Three good eyes should be left on the plants of Richmond rose at this time of year. To growers of Liberty this will sound like heresy, but Richmond will make as good a break from the third, fourth, or even the fifth eye on long shoots, and will do it quicker. Also, as winter approaches, as many leaves as possible are needed on the plants. Another point in this connection: Richmond will make a few blind shoots; do not cut them back; let them break naturally from the top eye and this second break will form a bud which can be cut with a good stem.

Temperature.

It is hardly necessary to warn growers to avoid the causes which lead to mildew and black spot, but as the cool nights come along do not run the Richmond house too hot. It will be necessary during the moderate weather, and especially damp weather, to carry a temperature of 60 degrees or above with air, to avoid moisture gathering on the plants, but as the season advances we have found that the Richmond does best in a night temperature of 56 degrees. In the latter part of October and during November the plants will be throwing canes from the bottom. Quantities of such shoots will show and, if allowed to grow naturally, will develop magnificent buds which can be cut with stems two feet long.

To Get Quantity.

However, unless your trade is willing to pay extra high prices, it will be found advisable to nip the top out of the heavy shoot when it reaches a height of ten to twelve inches, in which case three and sometimes four fine buds will develop and can be cut with 12-inch to 18-inch stems, thus producing a much greater quantity of medium grade flowers.

When to Cut the Buds.

One of the most important points which must be learned in connection with Richmond is how to cut the buds.

Blooms, Reduced in Size, Showing the Way the Richmond Rose Develops.

One criticism which has been frequently directed against this variety is its lack of fullness. This very characteristic, if the buds are properly cut and handled, becomes a point of merit rather than a fault.

To prove this statement allow me to call attention to the fact that we have never seen a "bull head" or malformed bud, have never had a bud stick or refuse to open in dark weather. The rapidity with which the buds develop in the dark months of winter is a direct result of this characteristic.

That Richmond is a wonderful keeper has been proven beyond dispute, but to accomplish this the buds must be cut at the right stage of development. The rule is, do not allow them to begin to uncurl the petals upon the plants if you want them to keep well. It is our aim to allow the buds to attain their growth on the plants but cut them before they begin to expand. The lower illustration on page 4 of our spring trade list shows the proper stage of development for cutting Richmond better than any description. They may be cut much tighter than this for long shipments and will undoubtedly perfect their flowers.

As to keeping, packing and shipping the buds, the right way for Bride and Maid is the right way for Richmond, and the best way is none too good.

Not a Finical Rose.

As was said in the start, we believe that Richmond enjoys "liberal" treatment, namely, plenty of air, plenty of sunshine, plenty of water, good, rich soil, and fertilizer, either as liquid or mulch, before that soil is exhausted.

It is a mistake to class Richmond with Liberty. Richmond is not a "touchy" rose to handle, it has no fads and foibles; coddling will make it sick, neglect will ruin it, but the same intelligence and ability that will produce good Bride or Maid will produce fine Richmond.

If your Richmonds are not growing well you may rest assured it is not the fault of the rose, for disinterested parties who have been in a position to observe the variety closely, agree that it is one of the most satisfactory roses to handle, one of the quickest to respond to good treatment, of all the forcing roses. If your plants have been starved, start using sufficient water to make the latent plant food in the soil available.

If they have been overindulged, go back to a natural treatment and give the roots a chance. If you allowed the young plants to stand around in small pots two months before planting, just take your medicine and don't say anything. If they are doing well, keep them on the jump and you will certainly fall in love with Richmond rose, as we have.

STUDIES IN CLUSTERS.—II.

The Panels Changed to Clusters.

The clusters shown herewith contain the same kind and number of flowers as their corresponding panels presented in last week's issue, except that there is less extra foliage in these two. First compare the two carnation bunches. The first argument advanced in favor of the solid panel arrangement is its size. By actual measurement the second is as long as the first, and its widest part is equal to that of the first. Otherwise the claim must be admitted. The first is larger than the second only because more ferns are used.

But upon what picture does the apparent amount of paint and oil determine the value? It is rather how much life shines out of the canvas.

Then it remains to be seen whether the second is more natural than the first. Three points immediately bristle up. First, the easier grouping and scattering of the carnations, which it cannot be denied is natural; second, the irregular outline of the cluster, being restful and attractive; third, the carnation foliage discarded from the first being placed where it belongs, at the base of the second cluster.

To diverge a little, this use of the natural stems in full view is one of the principal charms of a good cluster of flowers. Their natural length adds to the graceful lines and balances the apparent weight of many flowers tied together. To hide the good, healthy foliage and stems with which nature has garnished the flower, is a perversion of good taste.

After applying these three tests as to the naturalness of these two clusters, the conclusion can be safely left to the reader.

Taking up a comparison between the rose panel in the preceding issue and the rose cluster in today's REVIEW, one sees the same formal arrangement in the former as was observed in the first carnation piece. In the first panel of roses we find a monotonous, heavy, inactive succession of full blown roses upon a solid base of ferns, an exact reproduction of the carnation panel. No difference is made out of respect for the size and character of the flowers used.

A Cluster of Carnations Showing Some Originality on the Part of the Operator.

On the contrary, observe the same roses employed in a long, slender spray in today's issue. Toward the stem end of the spray the roses are grouped closely and boldly around the stems and foliage instead of all on top as in the panel. Different views are had of each flower as the eye follows toward the tip of the spray, where Asparagus plumosus forms a cloudy air, where the roses are more widely scattered and half concealed in the faint and misty lines of green.

There is an active, wind-tossed air to the spray which marks it as a characteristic conception. This example is not given as a type to be widely copied and adopted as a prevailing style, as the panel has come to be, but simply as one of the many suggestive and expressive forms into which an equal number of roses might grow.

But somebody might volunteer as an argument in favor of the rose panel, its showiness. By the latter term no doubt is meant true attractiveness, rather than obtrusive and gaudy display. Nine times out of ten the latter bunch would be noticeable among a score of the former, on account of its novelty, if not for its suggestion of wild freedom and life. The panel represents the trade, the spray the professional. The same mechanical skill employed in the first might accomplish much more in a strictly mechanical sphere.

Neither is it necessary to learn to make the first before making the second. Following the rule outlined in the REVIEW some months ago a beginner can find plenty of plans for clusters and sprays in the character and bend of some one or two of the long-stemmed flowers which are at hand for immediate use.

The habit of "seeing things" might as well be cultivated from the start. It has a commercial value in that it helps one to be prepared to do anything in his line on short notice. It certainly pays to do one's own thinking on one's feet, rather than to worry through volumes to find out something that somebody else has done in a similar case.

To conclude: We florists are photographers in a way; the flowers in the first two panels are the photographer's subject, raw and embarrassed. The portrait taken mechanically is the first product, the panel. No fault can be found with the workmanship; the light may be perfectly adjusted to shade; the picture is true to life as the operator found it. But here is another photographer who is able by sally or sympathy to awaken the better and finer traits so that they shine out through the face and figure, and by enticing the man away from himself for a moment he catches a better portrait than the first operator. The second set of clusters are the portraits of the flowers inspired to express the best there is in them in a much more natural and attractive pose. GERTRUDE BLAIR.

LONDON FASHIONS.

Purple asters are now much used by leading London florists for the groundwork of wreaths, crosses, anchors, etc. These, worked in close, with a few bold white flowers standing up, are quite the fashion. Much less green is used than formerly, except where a design is composed principally of foliage, with a bold bunch of flowers standing up on one portion only. A writer in the Horticultural Trade Journal says that he recently saw a large cross made up entirely of Lilium lancifolium album, with the buds standing above the open flowers, and that the same firm often make up designs composed of one subject only, or perhaps, the groundwork of one thing and a few "stand-ups" of another. One of the prettiest bouquets he has seen lately was made up of Liberty roses. "There was a good ground of Asparagus Sprengeri, and some trails hanging down. The roses stood out well with their own foliage. Though finished off as a shower bouquet, most of the flowers stood out on their own stems, and one point was, that there was no wire seen; even those on the drooping trails had a natural look." Some years ago there was much said about bouquets being too large, but like the ladies' hats, they seem to increase in size rather than diminish. Small flowers are not much wanted, except lily of the valley or anything that can be used to stand up among the larger flowers and foliage.

TO OUR READERS.

The REVIEW receives so many letters from readers who express, in warmest language, their very evident satisfaction with the paper, that its publishers are sometimes almost at the point of believing the REVIEW is all that a good trade journal should be. Indeed, there is, in addition, many times repeated, that "sincerest form of flattery" to show that the REVIEW is most fully meeting the wants of the trade. Yet it cannot be that there is no more room for improvement.

Now, highly as the REVIEW appreciates the kind words of those who tell us how much the paper is worth to them, what we would really like to get is a lot of candid, sensible, temperate fault-finding letters; letters pointing out weaknesses; letters of suggestion, indicating wherein the REVIEW can be strengthened to better fulfil its purpose of interest and helpfulness to each and every branch of our trade. The REVIEW does not agree to publish these letters, as it sometimes does the nice ones, but it is promised that each and every one shall have close and earnest consideration and that the readers shall have the benefit, in the betterment of the paper, of every idea which has the added merit of practicality.

And you appreciative ones, tell us how we may impress upon the heedless the largeness of the value we are already giving for the subscriber's dollar; there are yet a few remaining to be enlisted.

TWO BUSY WEEKS.

The first week in November will be a busy one for those who wish to take advantage of the big shows to put their novelties before the public eye, for in it will occur the four largest exhibitions of the year. The shows at Philadelphia, Chicago and St. Louis open on November 7 and continue five days. The Boston show opens two days later and continues over Sunday and Monday of the following week, which will of itself be no less crowded so far as western exhibitions are concerned, for the Kansas City exhibition, after a lapse of one year without a show, is scheduled for November 13 to 18 and the Indianapolis affair, on broader lines than ever before, is set for November 14 to 18. It will, indeed, be an active fortnight for exhibitors, and many will wish to take the fullest possible advantage of the opportunities, for prospects were never brighter for a season of successful shows.

air-slaked lime in these places. On bright, warm days each week fill the house with clouds of grape dust, this about ten or eleven o'clock in the morning. Above all do not get discouraged but continue to draw on the supply of plants you potted when housing.

THRIPS.

I am sending a carnation bud. The plants seem healthy but the flowers look half asleep when open and do not amount to anything. The soil is a sandy loam, to which I have added bone meal quite liberally. We have been burning red pepper and tobacco stems for the thrips. Can that have any effect on the blooms?

D. A. L.

Your plants are suffering from the ravages of thrips and you would better get after them in earnest at once. The bud you sent was pretty well dried up by the time it reached me, but I could see that it is a Lawson bud and edged with those white spots. I would advise you to discontinue the burning of red pepper and tobacco, and, in fact, it will pay you to discard the smoking altogether as old-fashioned. Use instead one of the tobacco extracts for spraying; you will find them more effective, cleaner and safer for your plants. When you begin give an application every morning for ten days and then ease off by giving an application twice each week until you get rid of the thrips. After you are rid of them once you can keep them down with one spraying each week. Greenfly will never appear on your place if you spray once each week according to directions. I have recommended this method so often and elaborated on its advantages so much that I will not repeat it all again at this time, but try this method and I know you will not return to the back number method of burning tobacco stems.

CARNATION NOTES.—EAST.

Disbudding.

The early flowering sorts will now be showing a disposition to make stems of fair length and substance. Though it is not policy to produce a large cut while the chrysanthemum holds sway, there is a demand for good carnations, as always.

The returns are comparatively small at this time of year and on this account some growers are apt to neglect disbudding, claiming it does not pay. This is on a par with the idea possessed by some hired help that not being paid to do certain work, it should be avoided, with the result we all so well know.

The primary object in disbudding is to aid in increasing the size of bloom, but this is by no means the only benefit derived from the practice. It helps to lengthen the stem and also aids materially in increasing substance or stiffness; then, too, the removal of surplus buds and growth must necessarily reduce the drain on the plant's resources.

By all means carry on the operation regularly and persistently from the first if you wish to reap full benefit. It is important that these side buds be removed as soon as they can be readily caught hold of, also by a side pull that no injury be done to leaf or stem. But do not be in too much of a rush, as there is such a thing as erring on the side of too early removal, especially in the case of those close under the main bud.

It seems in taking the bud off too soon, more or less of a wound is made in the stem, causing a contraction of tissue during the process of healing, resulting in the main buds turning to stand at an angle.

Stem-rot.

This season has brought the usual trouble from that dread disease, stem-rot, and there have been the customary inquiries as to treatment. Prevention is the best remedy, but with all one can do, weather conditions are sometimes such that we are at a serious disadvantage.

Given strong plants, not over-rich soil, a tight roof and ample means for supplying and regulating a constant circulation of air through the house at all times, the rest lies with the man behind the gun (water) and he can do more damage in a given time than all the weather men, forecasters, observers, etc., put together.

A plant once affected is doomed. Pull it out at once, removing also a quantity of the surrounding soil, leaving the excavation open to the sun and air for at least a week before resetting with another plant.

Sprinkle air-slaked lime and sulphur over the soil and do not be afraid to let a little lie up around the necks of the plants. Keep the surface soil open by frequent light rakings.

Allow no surplus water to lie in the paths or under the benches. Sprinkle

KEEPING THE BLOOMS.

The continued bright weather this fall is rushing the flowers along very rapidly, and with some varieties it will be necessary to store them away in order to hold them for the shows next month. When the plants are growing in pots or boxes this storing away is simplified, since all one has to do is to move the plant bodily into a cool cellar.

Where the plants are growing in the bench the flowers must be cut with good long stems and placed in barrels in the bottom of which is a foot or so of water. If the stem is at all weak a stout bamboo stake should be tied to it before placing it in the water, so that the flower will stand upright, as the stem will take up the water very much better than if the weight of the flower had bent it over.

The ideal place to keep the blooms is a moist cellar, with some means of ventilation, and a certain amount of light, to keep the foliage from turning yellow, and where an even temperature of about 40 degrees can be maintained. In such a place if the water is kept fresh and sweet by being changed every few days, flowers can be kept in perfect condition for two or three weeks if necessary.

It is always better to cut the flowers just a shade before they are at their best, if they have to be kept for any length of time, than to leave them on the plant until they are past their best. They will develop perfectly in water; in fact the incurving section build up much higher centers when finished in this manner than when left to finish on the plant.

Feeding.

Feeding should not be kept up too long and I think any flower, when it shows color well, should not receive any more liquid nourishment, and in the case of red varieties, even before the buds show color, as these kinds are always very much more addicted to damping than any other varieties. Let well enough alone, as the last watering with liquid may be the means of spoiling the flower.

If the plants are in small pots I have fed them with safety until the flowers were half way open, but it takes a good deal of experience to determine just how far one may go in this direction. Heavy feeding at any time does a plant more harm than good, since it rots the root fibers, as can easily be seen by turning the plants out of pots, and others must be formed before the plant can assimilate the food supplied.

One is more apt to overdo the thing with chemicals than with natural fertilizers, since the first named, after being dissolved, are colorless and odorless and look just as harmless as clear water.

Watering and Fumigating.

The times of saturating the bench are gone and the plants, as they finish, need less and less water. Only water on bright days and then in the early morning so that all superfluous water has dried up before night. A heavy, moist atmosphere at night is to be avoided above all things, as the moisture will condense on the petals and cause them to damp.

It is getting too late now to fumigate any more and if, as usually happens, some of the buds have greenfly in them the best way to clean them out is to tie a piece of one of the tobacco paper preparations up near the flower. The fumes arising from this will kill all the fly and save the flower, but wherever possible, fumigate long enough to clean out every insect before the buds show color.

Where one can get good tobacco stems they will keep down the fly if spread thickly along the paths, but tobacco stems in our section of late years have been useless, the makers of the nicotine solutions having apparently found it necessary to first soak the stems to extract the virtue of them, in case the grower should injure his plants by having the stems too strong. Such forethought is touching, but most growers would prefer to do their own thinking.

Two Good Ones.

Two good varieties that have developed during the past few days are Lady Hopetoun and Beatrice May. They are both Australian seedlings, but are out of the novelty class, as the first named has been out for some years and the latter was listed last year.

Hopetoun is a lovely reflexing pink and would create a sensation if placed on the market in the shape I saw it at several private establishments last week; simply immense in size and a lovely heliotrope in color.

Beatrice May is a pearly white and must be set down as one of the things that have come to stay. Every flower comes fine and it is today the most conspicuous thing in a lot of early varieties. It looks something like Mrs. Tranter in its dwarf, sturdy growth and conformation of flowers, but the blooms are cleaner and neater looking.

Pacific and Polly Rose, Omega, Alice Byron, Mrs. Coombes and White Coombes are just about ready to cut and in a few days more the market will be filled. Oh! for a frost! "A killing frost!"

SOME NEW MUMS.

Merstham Yellow, which was talked up last year to be such a fine early variety, even to rival Monrovia, is a great disappointment here, only just showing color and all the early buds coming green or blind. It will have to hustle to come in with second early varieties, such as Robert Halliday. Clementine Touse, another of last year's novelties, early white, is looking fine, but rather tall, and Jeanie Nonin, late white, is looking very promising but also tall. What we need most is an early white and an early pink to come in with Monrovia. Anyone having such a variety certainly would have a gem.

CHRYSANTHEMUM SOCIETY.

Special Premiums.

The annual exhibition of the Chrysanthemum Society of America will be held this year at Philadelphia, in connection with the annual fall show of the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society. The prospects are for a first-class exhibition, although there are a number of other large shows that week. In addition to the regular schedule of premiums the following special premiums have just been announced:

The C. S. A. prize, a silver cup, for the best ten flowers, one variety.

W. Wells & Co., Earlswood, Surrey, England, offer a gold medal, silver gilt medal and silver medal for six flowers of Chrysanthemum Mrs. W. Duckham. No exhibitor can win more than one of these medals.

F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, N. Y., offers a silver cup for thirty-six chrysanthemums, six varieties, six blooms of each, introduced in America in 1904 and 1905.

C. H. Totty, Madison, N. J., offers three prizes for twelve blooms in twelve varieties, stems not over twelve inches long, introductions of 1905; first, $12; second, $8; third, $5. Open to all.

Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, for the best specimen bush chrysanthemum plant, which has not received any other award, open to private gardeners only, offers a silver cup, valued at $25.

E. G. Hill Co., Richmond, Ind., offers two premiums for the best twenty-five blooms, one of a kind; first, $15; second, $10. Open to all.

John N. May, Summit, N. J., offers two premiums for the best twelve flowers in four varieties, three of each, 30-inch stems, no artificial supports; first, $15; second, $10. Open to private gardeners only.

Nathan Smith & Son, Adrian, Mich., offer a premium of $25 for the best American seedling, to be judged from a commercial standpoint.

H. W. Buckbee, Rockford, Ill., offers for the best ten chrysanthemums, one variety, open only to American and foreign introductions of 1905, or variety not yet in commerce, a silver cup valued at $25.

The Annual Report.

The Proceedings of the Third Annual Meeting of the Chrysanthemum Society of America has just come to hand, a neat pamphlet containing, besides the usual report of the meeting and exhibition, a list of the chrysanthemum introductions of 1903, which were not included in the lists published by the society in 1904. The publication of this list, together with that for 1905, completes the catalogue of varieties to date. Members can obtain copies of the original list by applying to the secretary.

Committees on Seedlings.

President Duckham has announced the committees to examine seedlings and sports on dates as follows: October 14, 21 and 28; November 4, 11, 18 and 25, 1905.

Exhibits to receive attention from the committees must in all cases be prepaid to destination, and the entry fee of $2 should be forwarded to the secretary not later than Tuesday of the week preceding examination, or may accompany the blooms. Special attention is called to the rule requiring that sports to receive a certificate must pass three committees.

PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

[The Chrysanthemum, by Arthur Herrington; the Orange Judd Co.; 50 cents.]

The many friends of Arthur Herrington have had their patience rewarded this week. Mr. Herrington's chrysanthemum book is out. Those who know the thoroughness with which Mr. Herrington applies himself to any undertaking were prepared for something of wider scope and greater detail, not to say higher finish, than has heretofore been accomplished and they are not disappointed. The work is one which goes exhaustively into the culture of the chrysanthemum in all its phases, treating each detail at greater length than it has been done before in America and embodying the results of Mr. Herrington's many years of experience with his favorite flower. There are also chapters contributed by C. H. Totty, E. G. Hill, F. P. Davis, R. A. Vincent and others and the volume of 158 pages is not only fully illustrated, in many cases from Mr. Herrington's own photographs, but it is also fully indexed, which is a point of no small value in a work of reference such as this is.

One is interested in Mr. Herrington's outline of what he proposed to make this book. In his introductory note it is said: "The subject as a whole is an alluring one and it is no matter for surprise that some writers have let speculative fancy run riot among the recorded facts of the chrysanthemum's gradual evolution." It is natural to infer, then, that this is a work in which fancy has had no part. "The endeavor has been to show that not in secret arts or practice, but in a plain course of procedure, are attained the results as demonstrated" by the most successful cultivators.

There is no question but what a work of cultural directions such as this will have a large sale, which will be added to by Mr. Herrington's wide acquaintance and by the fact of his good work as president as the Chrysanthemum Society of America.

Those who wish to receive a copy of the book, which is substantially bound, will receive same postpaid if they send a half-dollar to the REVIEW.

NECESSITY FOR CLEANLINESS.

I suppose that everybody who planted a house of violets last spring, for the coming season, has been painstaking and thorough in the care of them; however, do not think that they are in such good shape that you can afford to neglect them for a few weeks in order to get the fall work done ready for Jack Frost, for close attention is needed fully as much now as at any time, one great reason being that if they get out of condition in any way at present you cannot regain lost ground now as you could earlier in the season, when good growing weather prevailed.

Look out closely that no aphids of any kind gets a foothold. If you have not already spread your regular feast of Paris green and granulated sugar for the benefit of the sow bugs, stray snails and centipedes, do not fail to do so at once, and then it is well to follow it up at comparatively short intervals, because, as I have often remarked, they are extremely expensive company and have no redeeming features that I am aware of; their room is much more to be desired than their company.

Again, unless you have a demand for very early flowers, it is much better to keep the first early buds picked off and not let them come into bloom until you have a good demand, and then, too, the first are so inferior in quality that it is a detriment to your reputation as a first-class grower to let such go out from your establishment.

At the same time that you are disbudding, carefully cut off all the runners, only leaving your strong flowering crowns; in fact it is to be supposed that you have done this at regular intervals all summer. This is something that is a constant job but growing less from now on until the springtime approaches, with the quickening in growth that accompanies the sun.

Cyclamen Grown by Theodore Venneman, Gardener to George Urban, Pine Ridge, N. Y.

The Coliseum, Where the Chicago Show will be Held Next Month.

Yes! You will also find some dead and yellow leaves that should be removed, but while at all of this work, for the coming months, you will be cheered by their fragrance; it has been very noticeable for several days past, whenever we came into the houses, and as violets without this are worthless, too great care cannot be exercised in preventing foreign odors of any kind in the houses anywhere that the blooms may be placed or carried, for they absorb with seeming avidity every little odor, good, bad or indifferent that comes anywhere near them. As any contamination makes them worthless, don't even let anyone smoke while near them, for if you do your customers will say, as I have heard a florist friend of mine say before now, "W-h-e-w! I smell tobacco." While some may like—yes, perchance, enjoy—the same, I have yet to see anybody who favored a mixture of violet and tobacco odors. Now, while it may seem as if I were over-insistent on these matters to the beginner in growing violets, still I think every old grower will bear me out when I say that you cannot be too particular in these points if you wish to hold the best trade.

FINE CYCLAMENS.

On visiting the private greenhouses of George Urban, Pine Ridge, Erie county, N. Y., where Theodore Venneman is gardener, some time last February, I was struck with the beauty and culture of several two-year-old cyclamen plants and made a request that one or two of them be photographed and now show you the result. The writer does not remember ever having seen more perfect or better flowered plants. In the group of three plants the smaller plants are two well flowered one-year-old plants in 5-inch or 6-inch pots. They were such cyclamens as any commercial man might be proud of, but merely figure in the picture to give you a more correct idea of the qualities of the older plant than any wordy description could do. The single plant was slightly handsomer than the large one in the group, having larger individual flowers.

Mr. Venneman said that after these plants flowered in 6-inch pots they were stood on ashes in cold frames, in May or early June. They were given little attention, but never allowed to get dust dry. In early August they showed signs of again starting into growth, both leaf and root. A little of the old soil was carefully picked away, but the started roots were not disturbed and the plants were shifted into 8-inch pots. They were still left in the cold frame and shaded during the hottest hours until the end of September, when they were brought into the house and shifted into 10-inch, the size of pot they flower in. They were grown indoors on a side bench of a carnation house, where the temperature was probably a little over 50 degrees during winter.

As I looked at these magnificent plants I remarked, "We have customers who would give us $10 each for them," and that is true, for their beauty was almost irresistible. Surely there would be a handsome profit at a little less than a "ten spot." You may sell fifty of the one-year-old plants to one of these beauties, yet a few dozen would be well worth growing. When the boss felt ugly and fretty and out of sorts with everything, a visit to these cyclamens would be most cheering.

THE CHICAGO SHOW.

Chicago is prone to defer action in many matters until the last moment, then to take off its coat and hustle and achieve success in a whirlwind finish. Such has been the story of a number of its most successful flower shows and in this particular history promises to again repeat itself this year. A late start was made but every indication points to the best show ever given in the west, if not in the whole United States. This is not even excepting the very successful World's Fair show of last year.

Those charged with the management of the Chicago show have hesitated to tackle so large a proposition as the Coliseum. This has been talked of year after year, as other halls have proved inadequate to the needs of the occasion. But the Coliseum is so much larger than any other building in Chicago that it has heretofore been considered out of the question. However, last year's accommodations were so much more than ever inadequate to the needs of the exhibition that when the Coliseum management came forward with a very reasonable proposition, because of an unoccupied week, the deal was closed in short order and everyone is glad that at length Chicago will have room enough for all the exhibits supplied.

The accompanying illustration gives an idea of the character of the building. It has more than an acre and a half of floor space besides galleries with seating accommodations for several thousands of persons. It is the building in which the horse show is held each year and in the spring Ringling Bros.' great circus spends a month in this building.

The preliminary premium list for the Chicago show carries upwards of $5,000 in cash prizes and a number of special premiums are being arranged for and will be announced shortly. With the assurance of the largest attendance ever known at a Chicago exhibition the big growers are preparing to make larger exhibits than ever before. Manager Asmus has already heard from a large number, but there is space in plenty and everyone will be more than welcome. It is hoped to have every item of seasonable stock represented and to make the show one which will have an after effect on trade far greater than the great good which has resulted in previous years.

The Chicago Florists' Club has already announced its intention of entertaining visiting members of the trade on Thursday of flower show week.

Vegetable Forcing.

ENGLISH cucumber forcers have for several years suffered heavy losses through the ravages of a spot disease which frequently destroyed whole houses of plants and for which no remedy has been discovered. But several varieties have now come to the front which are heralded as "spot proof" and which, if they prove true to the description, will be worth large sums. One man is selling a large crop of seed at $25 an ounce.

SOILS FOR HEAD LETTUCE.

In the REVIEW of June 15 I noticed the following question: "Will some one give us a reason why the growing of head lettuce under glass has never been successful in the Chicago district?"

One of the principal reasons why head lettuce is not grown in the west is that the texture of the soil is quite different from that of the Atlantic seaboard. I imagine another reason is that the curly, or Grand Rapids, lettuce is better liked in the west and consequently better adapted to the market than in the east. The Atlantic coast soils, or truck soils, as they are called, are noted for containing a considerable amount of coarse sand and a small amount of finer constituents, such as silt and clay. When eight or ten per cent or more of organic matter is added to this soil it makes an excellent medium for growing vegetables. This soil is very loose and friable, and it is not difficult to run one's hand under the surface for a considerable distance with little effort. On the other hand, the western soils are much heavier and more compact, and on this account they are unsuitable for growing head lettuce.

Lettuce is very susceptible to soil texture. It is necessary, even in the germination of the seeds that they should be provided with air; hence they will germinate much better in a loose soil than in a compact one. The roots of the young seedlings and mature plants also require air, such as is furnished in a loose soil. I have numerous photographs showing results of experiments with lettuce that illustrate the influence of loose and compact soil on seed germination and the development of the plant. Young lettuce seedlings will remain stationary for weeks in a soil of fine texture, and they eventually die from want of root aeration.

In order that the influence of texture of the soil in the development of lettuce may be brought out more clearly I refer the reader to the following table:

Table showing the influence of soil texture (coal ashes) on the germination of lettuce seed and growth of plants; 200 seeds used in each box.

Size of particles. (Coal ashes.)	Percent germination of seed.	Av. wt. in milligrams, of seedlings
Box 1—(2-1 millimeters.....)	65.5.....	25.19
Box 2—(1-.5 ".....)	68.0.....	23.52
Box 3—(.5-.25 ".....)	38.5.....	12.98
Box 4—(.25-.1 ".....)	33.5.....	7.46
Box 5—(.1-.0001 ".....)	18.0.....	5.50

In this experiment, which was made in coal ashes sifted through sieves, we have similar conditions as regards plant food.

The experiment was made in boxes eight inches square, there being the same amount of soil in each box. The boxes were weighed daily and the moisture contents of the medium in which the plants were growing were brought to the same degree of saturation. The factors, therefore, likely to rise through the influence of variation in the amount of plant food, and the percentage of moisture contained in the soil or ashes on growth are eliminated as far as possible in this experiment. From this table it will be seen that there is a marked difference in the number of seeds germinated and in the size of the seedlings grown in different sized particles, the finer particles preventing germination and retarding growth. This difference is due to the amount of air and oxygen contained in the medium in which the plants are grown, or, in other words, the amount of aeration which the seed and seedling received.

The following table showing the mechanical analysis of some different soils

Nos. 27 and 54 are Connecticut valley soils, in which fine particles predominate. Nos. 9 and 17 are coast soils and especially suitable for market garden purposes, and in particular for the growth of head lettuce. Of the two soils, Nos. 9 and 17, we would consider No. 17 the better adapted for lettuce, inasmuch as coarser constituents predominate to a greater extent than in No. 9. However, both soils are excellent for this purpose. On the other hand, the Connecticut valley soils, Nos. 27 and 54, will grow head lettuce after a fashion, but they are not by any means so well suited to this crop. These soils, on account of an excess of very fine sand and silt, become compact even when provided with a considerable amount of organic matter. These soils, moreover, do not contain a sufficient amount of air space for the development of lettuce.

What is true of the Connecticut valley soils is also true, as we understand it, of the western soils, although the western soils may not predominate in fine sands in the east will illustrate what constitutes a good lettuce soil and what is an indifferent or poor one. One can obtain a very good idea of the mechanical properties of a soil by considering the gravel, coarse, medium and fine sand in one series, and very fine sand, silt and clay in another series by themselves. Where the larger particles predominate, such as gravel and sand, we have a good market garden soil suitable for most vegetables, but where the finer particles predominate, fine sand, silt and clay, the soil is not suitable for many vegetables. A soil made up of coarse particles has not the water retaining capacity that one has composed of finer particles.

but the silts and clays may be higher. There are probably many places in the west where a good, coarse, sandy soil may be obtained, and with the addition of large amounts of organic matter they could no doubt be made suitable for growing head lettuce. There are probably no climatic conditions to hinder the growing of head lettuce in the west as successfully as in the east. There are undoubtedly some difficulties arising through lack of skill in handling the crop, inasmuch as it cannot be expected that the western gardeners, with much less experience in growing head lettuce, can compete at first with the eastern gardeners who have practically created and

GEORGE E. STONE.

[An essay by Amelia R. Shaw, of Brooklyn, awarded first prize in the contest originated and conducted by the Review correspondent at Philadelphia.]

Secondly, the ideal salesman must be possessed of personal magnetism, without which, indeed, it is impossible for any one to succeed in any personal dealings with his fellowmen. It is much more, for the time being, than mere honesty, for it is the quality that first attracts, then persuades, and finally dominates, and every man, woman and child on the footstool is susceptible to its subtle influence. If, therefore, Mr. Flowerman, you have an employee behind the counter

With regard to the traveling salesman, the above qualifications are still more essential, but there is something more to be said. The ideal traveling salesman will not think it necessary to "treat" a customer in order to get a good order, not because of meanness, but because he will be too normal and healthy a specimen of manhood to have any intimacy with the flowing bowl, and also because with his tact, magnetism and agreeability, he can accomplish his purpose without the aid of conviviality. Being perfectly able to transact business without the need of stimulants, he will not insult his patrons by practically imputing to them any such weakness. But he will be very careful not to condemn where he cannot sympathize and so give offense to none, while retaining the goodwill of all.

Plans for National Effort.

The possibilities of the work of the council were discussed in considerable detail; its standing in case its influence might be needed in a national way on questions of customs, postage or like work with the transportation companies; its

The ideal salesman should also have a power internationally considered on questions of nomenclature and other similar lines.

The delegates from the national bodies above mentioned, while having no authority to bind definitely their organizations, did, however, express themselves as fully satisfied that great benefit might accrue to their societies through the plans proposed if rightly worked out, and all pledged themselves to recommend to their respective societies that a union on the general plan outlined by Professor Bailey for the formation of the council in July last, be carried out as early as practical.

Publicity Bureau.

But the question of promoting horticulture in a broad way on the nursery, florist and seed lines appealed so strongly to those present that it was decided (pending the action of these three societies themselves at their next annual meetings, which will not occur for many months) to make a good preliminary trial of the proposed press news by means of private subscriptions to be taken up from the leading members of the above trades, firms largely interested in horticulture in their respective lines. To this end a letter was ordered to be prepared, which should be sent out under the heading of the national council and signed by its officers, the letter to the leading florists to be signed and sent out by Philip Breitmeyer, representing the Society of American Florists, by J. H. Dayton, of the Storrs & Harrison Co., for the American Nurserymen's Association, and by C. E. Kendel for the American Seed Trade Association.

It was believed that by means of such letters requesting a nominal contribution from prominent firms, this experiment which has worked such wonders for the benefit of the American Civic Association, could be tried in a similar way for horticulture, and the results when laid before these associations at their next annual meeting would afford them good and reliable data on which they could intelligently decide regarding their support of the proposed national council.

Those Present.

The meeting was greatly aided by the advice of J. Horace MacFarland, president of the American Civic Association, and D. J. Thomas, of Springfield, Ohio, of the same association, and who is to be credited with the preparation of much of the news matter which has been sent out by that association. J. C. Vaughan acted as chairman of the meeting, and H. C. Irish, secretary. Among others present during the sessions were C. E. Kendel, J. F. Sullivan, J. A. Griffith, Philip Breitmeyer, J. H. Dayton, J. Horace MacFarland, Wm. Gammage, D. J. Tomas and Adam Graham.

Letters and telegrams were read from Prof. John Craig, Prof. L. H. Bailey, Prof. L. R. Taft, Wm. Scott, T. C. Wilson, secretary American Apple Growers' Congress; E. Albertson, president American Association of Nurserymen; Prof. W. W. Tracy, Prof. S. B. Green, Prof. E. J. Wickson and T. V. Munson.

PROPAGATING DRACAENAS.

It may be briefly stated that dracaenas of the terminalis class are propagated by means of cuttings, the latter being procured in quantity from old stems or canes of these plants. The canes of Dracaena terminalis are imported from the West Indies chiefly, and are sold by the foot, the sections of stem being of various lengths.

These canes are laid down on a propagating bed of light soil, or sand and sphagnum moss, and almost covered with the soil. With a temperature of 70 to 75 degrees and plenty of moisture they will soon start shoots from the dormant buds, these young shoots being cut off when a few inches high, and then treated as cuttings by planting them in sand in the same warm house until they are nicely rooted, the latter process occupying about three weeks.

When rooted the cuttings should be potted off into 2-inch or 3-inch pots, according to size, kept warm and moist and protected from the sun for a few days.

Some fine plants of dracaenas are also secured by taking off the tops of those plants that have lost some of their lower leaves, the tops having been nicked with a knife and then mossed up after the same method as that practiced with ficus.

Dracaenas of the indivisa type are propagated from seeds, the latter being offered by most seedsmen, and if fresh will germinate freely, while those much used species known as Dracaena Sanderiana and D. Godseffiana may both be multiplied readily by means of cuttings, these rooting in two to three weeks in a warm greenhouse. W. H. TAPLIN.

CHICAGO.

The Market.

There are varying reports as to the state of the market this week. Some houses say that business has shown some recession, while others report things still on the up grade. Whatever weakness there may be is generally attributed to the very warm weather.

The Beauty crops have come along rapidly in the past week and there are now large supplies, rather more, in fact, than the demand calls for, and prices are considerably weaker. Quality was never better at this season. The cuts of small roses do not show the increase apparent in Beauties. Receipts are about as they were last week, some stock excellent, but too many short-stemmed and soft flowers; however the best grade is advancing in price in proportion to the improvement in quality. E. G. Hill says that all the growers are cutting Richmond too soon for best results later, but some very fine flowers are now to be had.

The carnation market shows little change, although prices are perceptibly weaker. Quality is improving slowly and stems are lengthening but the flowers are soft because of the heat and there is considerable complaint as to the carrying qualities. Outdoor stuff is practically gone. Violets are principally from the east, arriving in very poor condition.

Chrysanthemums began coming in heavily this week and prices are lower. A few pink are seen and plenty of yellow and white are to be had. The demand is not what it was a week ago, but the quality of the stock is much better.

The call for "green goods" continues active, but there is no trouble in filling all orders.

The Jewish Holidays.

The Jewish holidays are just past. You ought to get F. C. Struvy to tell you about them and their effect on the flower trade. For many years Mr. Struvy has run a store on the southwest side, where the bulk of his trade is among the Russian and Polish Jews. He has studied their religious customs until he knows not only to the day but to the hour when they will call for flowers. He now has two stores and does much the larger part of his work with roses, principally white, and there are wholesalers who subscribe to his assertion that he handles more roses than any other two stores in town. He has had as high as thirty-eight Jewish weddings in one day, each calling for its bouquets of white roses. While his trade does not call for the best stock regardless of price, Mr. Struvy has been undeniably successful, has made money, and is entitled to all the more credit for it that his results have been achieved in a locality where most men would have failed. The wholesalers attribute no small part of his success to the fact that he always carries plenty of stock and also to his practice of selling at the same old prices, not giving everything a boost every time a few days' shortage develops in the market. Would there were more Struvys.

Coals to New Castle.

There are those who still look upon the East with the same reverence as did people of old, believing that thence flows all that is good. Indeed, there are some in the Chicago market who not only think that all is good which comes out of the East but hope that styles are set in New York; and among these is the Poehlmann Bros. Co., which is shipping stock to Fleischman, Twenty-fifth and Broadway, where the elect of the land most do congregate. Thus far this season most of the shipments have been green goods, but other stock has gone, and last season frequent shipments of Beauties were made. With the New York wholesale district within five minutes' walk of Fleischman's store!

And even at that, a certain well-known western florist whom we all like, last fall had the nerve to send east for Beauties in the expectation of taking a premium away from Chicago exhibitors.

Various Notes.

The fine weather of the past few days has not tended to help trade. Frost is needed to put activity into society. Here are the maximum temperatures on the days indicated:

6th.....66 degrees	10th.....58 degrees
7th.....77 degrees	11th.....42 degrees

We started September with a deficiency of 250 degrees in heat for the year; now it is down to 49 degrees, which we are short.

The Florists' Club will meet tonight and will undoubtedly adopt the change in by-laws so as to meet but once a month hereafter, on the second Thursday of each month. Officers will be elected. The slate nominated is an excellent one and the year should be a good one. Flower show matters will be up tonight. Music and refreshments are now a regular feature of each meeting. J. A. Budlong may well claim to be the champion long distance bicycle rider of the trade. He makes it a practice to ride all the way to his old home near Providence, R. I., every year. If he for any reason fails of a trip one year, he rides both down and back the next trip. It is 1,150 miles by the shortest route. His recent trip was the twelfth time he has wheeled the distance. It takes two to three weeks, according to the condition of the roads.

George Reinberg's place is said, by recent visitors, to be in not only about the best shape it has ever been but in about the best shape of any in town.

A novel outflower holder is a good seller with the E. F. Winterson Co. It consists of a low glass bowl in which sits a cylinder of glass. Through the cylinder are twenty-four small holes. Put some water in the bowl, stick the stems of the flowers in the holes, and there you are, every woman her own florist.

E. C. Amling says it makes him feel quite well satisfied to hear people tell how slow business is to start up this unprecedentedly warm fall, for he has found October thus far quite a little better than the same period in any other year.

Bassett & Washburn are cutting one of the largest crops of Beauties they have ever had and Mr. Washburn says that he never had the pleasure of handling better stock. About twenty per cent are extra long, with few shorts.

Mrs. C. M. Dickinson underwent a serious surgical operation Monday morning and is convalescing nicely.

N. J. Wieter says that in his judgment Lieut. Peary is the coming white carnation. Wieter Bros. are also cutting good Burki and Bountiful.

The A. L. Randall Co. is receiving shipments of eastern orchids. They say the cattleyas go nicely but that the other varieties are not known or wanted.

J. E. Jensen, of Jensen & Dekema, spent last week in visiting St. Louis and points in Kentucky, Illinois and Indiana. He saw considerable good stock but returned confirmed in the belief that his firm's carnations, which are doing splendidly, are not surpassed anywhere.

McKellar is receiving some especially fine cattleyas just now.

Muir had a big wedding decoration Monday and Samuelson had a fine one Wednesday. Trade is gradually getting under way on the south side.

H. Luedtke has had more or less trouble the past two winters in heating his plant at Maywood. Last season he put in a new boiler but it didn't help. so this season he is going to use hot water under pressure.

At the Commercial Club's banquet last Saturday night the principal decoration was a huge floral reproduction of the club's button. The guests numbered 1,017.

ket. Inquiries as to stock have already been made.

The bowlers will play this winter in the Illinois league, at Anson's. The first session was on Tuesday night. The team at the start is the same as at the Washington convention but is open to change if new talent develops. Last Thursday night the florist bowlers to the number of nearly a dozen were the guests of Capt. A. I. Simmons and the Seventh Regiment bowlers at Tattersalls. It was a merry evening.

The regular quarterly meeting of the Horticultural Society was held at the Auditorium Annex Tuesday afternoon. The executive committee had a session of several hours, acting on routine matters for the approaching show.

Edgar Sanders celebrated his seventy-eighth birthday October 10. A coterie of his friends and relatives helped him pass a very enjoyable day and evening at his home, where refreshments were served.

Visitors.

Visitors the past week included: E. G. Hill, Richmond, Ind., who was taken ill while here and forced to hasten home; N. R. Swan, Lima, O., who will concentrate his efforts; J. J. Waaland, Findlay, O., who recently bought N. R. Swan's place there; Mr. Sullivan, of Galvin's, Boston, who was "just looking around;" C. E. Lindsay, Birmingham, Ala., who is a son of Wm. Lindsay; John Bertermann, Indianapolis, on flower show business; Fred E. Plagge, Elgin, Ill., who was looking for supplies; C. O. Williams, Batavia, Ill., who reports trade good.

THE REVIEW'S Pronouncing Dictionary sent on receipt of 25 cents.

COLORA, MD.—George Balderston, of the Colora Nurseries, reports that all indications point to a good season. Inquiries are already coming in for lettuce, which is wanted nine months in the year by quite an extensive home trade. Carnations are looking well. Surplus stock is scarce in this section of the country and hard to get to fill vacancies caused by stem-rot, which has been bad this year.

BOSTON.

The Market.

The quantity of flowers arriving continues to increase steadily, a heavy production being caused by the splendid weather we have had during the past fortnight. Chrysanthemums are coming in more plentifully and make a noticeable difference to carnations. Very soon they will also affect rose prices seriously. The varieties arriving include Bergmann, Willowbrook, Monrovia, Marquis de Montmort, Polly Rose and Glory of Pacific. Prices vary from $8 to $16 per hundred.

American Beauties continue to sell well and the best grades have shown a slight hardening tendency. Brides, Maids, Kaiserins and Liberty are all coming of good quality. Best Maids have reached $10. Short-stemmed stock of all kinds moves very slowly.

Carnations are much more abundant and have slumped a little in price. Violets, both single and double, are arriving quite freely, 50 cents per hundred being a fair average price. Some good lily of the valley comes in. Prices on this show no change. Some asters and gladioli are still seen and from sheltered locations a good many dahlias still arrive, selling very well. There is no change in green stock.

Various Notes.

Montrose Greenhouses are handling very fine Bride, Maid and Liberty roses at their stall in the Park street market. Herbert C. Tyler is their new salesman and fills his post very efficiently.

Malcolm Orr, as usual, led the procession with mums this season. He grows mostly early varieties and follows them with sweet peas, which he grows finely.

Anderson & Williams are about the only growers of Bouvardia Humboldtii for the Boston market. It sells well at the stores just now and deserves its popularity, for it is far the best of its family.

Peonies and sweet peas will form two important shows in Boston next season. Quite a number of new classes are added for each of these flowers.

The Boston Mycological Club continues to have large and interesting exhibits of fungi at Horticultural hall each Saturday, which attract many visitors.

Oakes Ames, R. G. Leavitt and A. Eaton, of North Easton, sailed for Europe on October 9. They will visit botanic gardens, horticultural libraries and noted herbariums in London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna and other cities.

Houghton & Clark had a prettily arranged window the past week, composed of cattleyas, crotons and adiantums.

Circulars are out for the meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club on October 17. Superintendent Pettigrew, of the Boston park system, will speak on parks and gardens of Europe and their development as seen in his recent trip. A reception for members of the North Shore Horticultural Society, who will attend in a body, will be held at 7:30, the regular meeting commencing at 8 o'clock. There will be some interesting exhibits, music and refreshments. Applications for membership continue to come in and everything points to the club having the largest membership of any similar organization in the country ere the year closes. The attendance on October 17 will break all records.

It is many years since we had such a magnificent fall. For over a fortnight cloudless skies have been the rule. The tints on trees and shrubs are superb and certainly our New England climate at this season of the year is incomparable. Of course croakers tell us "we will suffer for this later on," but we naturally expect some shadow after such a glorious spell of brilliant weather.

Welch Bros. are receiving some exceptionally fine Beauty and Queen of Edgely roses at present. Their receipts of violets, carnations and chrysanthemums are also reaching large proportions.

W. N. CRAIG.

SALT LAKE CITY.—Thos. W. Burnett is planning to build three carnation houses 20x100.

LITTLE ROCK, ARK.—J. W. Vestal & Son are building two more houses each 25x200 feet, modern in every detail. They have also put in two new boilers in the old range of houses.

"The First Principle"

The first principle in business is a profit. You want to make a profit on every dollar's worth of flowers that you sell. It is easy enough to do that once, but the test of your ability is to keep on doing it and the only way to keep on doing it is to sell flowers that are profitable to your customers.

"Second day's cut" won't do it; "sleepy" looking flowers won't do it. Nothing but the best at a reasonable price will. You can get that kind from us, you can't get any other kind.

A NEW PIPE WRENCH.

The Kroeschell Bros. Co., the well known Chicago boiler manufacturers, have recently added a new chain pipe wrench to their list of inventions. The firm, in common with innumerable greenhouse owners, has felt the need of a tool which would hold on irregular surfaces. Having found and patented an article which they feel fully meets the requirements, they are now putting it on the market and find it sells like hot cakes, not only to florists, for whose use it was especially designed, but to all classes of people having to do with steam or hot water piping.

The peculiar construction of this tool is such that it will not only take hold on ordinary pipe surfaces but by means of the "V" shaped jaws it will take a firm grip on irregular surfaces, such as beaded fittings, valves, flanges, etc. Wm. K. Kroeschell, speaking with a wide experience, declares that there is no other wrench which will hold these irregular surfaces.

The Kroeschell Co. has published a neat catalogue descriptive of their new wrench which they will doubtless be glad to send to anyone interested if he addresses them at 51 Erie street, Chicago.

NEW ORLEANS.

The weather has been very rainy for the past eight or ten days. This time of the year is generally a dry season, which is somewhat better for outdoor chrysanthemums. No doubt some of the stock has been damaged in low places.

The exact time and place of the flower show have not been decided as yet, but the strong support of the Sunshine Association is an assured fact and this will make the exhibit a grand success.

The German Gardeners' Club had its monthly meeting last Wednesday at the hall at Carondelet and Third streets. President Paul Abele was in the chair. After the general routine of business was transacted an essay on the forcing of the lily of the valley was read by H. Kraak.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Market.

Warm, sunny weather has brought in a quantity of flowers such as this market has never seen. Were it not for the holding back of the knowing ones, we should be fairly swamped. As it is there are far too many flowers to meet the demands of a very fair business and everyone hopes that Jack Frost will be here before these lines are read; that is, everyone except the dahlia men, who are reaping a great harvest. Never were dahlias so popular. Chrysanthemums mums are becoming more plentiful but the demand is still excellent, Glory of Pacific being the only one to tumble in price. Gardenias, orchids and valley are in fair supply and good demand. Greens sell poorly. Violets are more plentiful but have not yet rounded into form.

The Ideal Salesman.

Twenty-one essays mailed on or before September 30 reached Phil. A glance showed that two of these were duplicates. The judges found the remaining nineteen full of ideas and giving evidence of painstaking effort that made their task very difficult. The plan adopted was to omit all reference to the grower, the decorator and what the salesman ought not to be, sticking closely to the point. This proved very hard on some of the longer essays. First reading showed that a number of the competitors had brought out the points of honesty, tact, knowledge, courtesy and care of the employer's interest, but only one, No. 7, brought out magnetism as intensifying the other good qualities. This point of magnetism, or personality, the judges believe distinguishes the ideal from the ordinary salesman and is by no means rare today. A second reading of the better essays confirmed this opinion and No. 7 was awarded first prize.

The contest for second prize was spirited. No. 1 was a terse statement of qualifications under four heads, strongly put. No. 14 was a practical account of the qualities that should be possessed by the best salesman. No. 15 dwelt especially on wide-awakeness and judgment in directing the customers' choice. No. 16 expressed some good ideas, especially what the ideal employer might do to make the ideal salesman, while No. 20 was a clear synopsis of the necessary virtues. It was finally decided that second prize should be awarded to No. 14.

The opening of the envelopes containing the names of the competitors showed that first prize was won by Amelia R. Shaw, of Brooklyn; second prize won by P. Welch, of Boston.

Several of the competitors' names were found to be on stamped envelopes addressed to themselves, probably for the return of the essays, which are, however, the property of the REVIEW until as many as practicable are published. The duplicates were explained by the writer, fearing the first copy would not reach its destination.

Phil heartily congratulates the winners on their success. He is greatly surprised and pleased at the widespread interest taken in the subject and hopes that a careful perusal of some of the essays will lead to a higher standard among our salesmen.

The Chester Valley.

David and Jonathan decided, the better to see all they could, to indulge in—no, not an automobile—a carriage and pair from the West Grove stables. Edward Parker consented to join and cheer them by the way and, as it chanced, to learn a little of his adopted country and the good people thereof. Morris, the driver and owner of the pair, proved a veritable Jehu, the party bowling out over the Telford in style.

By a two to one vote it was decided that Roney Bros.' carnations and Benjamin Connell's ferns were "not for Joseph." Alas, time forbade. More's the pity. So they trotted out past West Grove, Morris describing how the near horse could trot in 2:38 or better. Unluckily the "far" horse could not stand that racket. Jonathan's bluff at buying that near horse was promptly called by Morris. Past Avondale; scene of one of David's best stories—you really ought to hear that story. It seems that certain Philadelphia horticulturists of a jovial turn once visited Avondale and, after seeing the horticultural objects of interest, one of them said they were thirsty. Their host immediately left the room, while they waited in pleasant anticipation. In a moment, to their horror, they heard the creak of the pump handle!

Into Toughkenamon—have I spelled it aright?—where the first stop was made at Walter Yeatman's. The houses are devoted to tomatoes on the benches, growing nicely for a winter crop, and to mushrooms under the benches and in a shed, just starting. The proprietor was absent.

The next place was that of James Chambers, who has a lot of glass for carnations, smilax, asparagus, etc. Mr. Chambers was hard at work, but feeling a little low in his mind. His best man was away at a sister's wedding and the houses were not yet filled. David sympathized with him. David has a big heart and felt that even he would have been sour-balled under such adverse conditions. David is a good judge, having weathered many trying experiences.

N. B.—David is not a commission man.

After a few pleasant words with Mr. Chambers the party drove still further from the main road, up one of those pretty country lanes bordered by pretty bits of woodland and always the fertile fields and homelike farmhouses that mark the picturesque Chester valley. A turn in the road brought the visitors to Lawrence Thompson's place described as one of the most modern greenhouse plants in Chester county.

THE READERS' CORNER.

Sectional vs. Tubular Boilers.

Referring to your issue of September 28 I wish to make an exception to your correspondent's advice in regard to "Boiler and Piping," where he says a return tubular boiler is the most economical of fuel of any form you can employ for hot water heating. I want to say that my experience has been the opposite, for several reasons: First, I will say that there are up-to-date sectional cast-iron boilers that are far superior in every way for hot water heating, for the following reasons: They have more direct fire surface and do not have the large body of water to heat, which is the case in a return tubular boiler; that is, so much water that is not reached by direct fire surface. This means more fuel and a slow circulation. A return tubular takes up about twice as much room, requires a lot of brick, making it expensive to set and, last,

Business has been rather quiet the past week and will most likely remain so as long as the present warm weather continues. While good roses are quite plentiful carnations are still rather scarce. Chrysanthemums are seen, but only in small quantities.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Florists' Club was held October 4, being very well attended. Ernest Herman was unanimously elected a member of the club. After the cigars were passed by Ferdinand Kolbe, "a new boy," the regular work was begun.

The question box contained such questions as "What effect will the mixing of lime and bone meal have on roses if applied as a top dressing to the soil?" "What will get rid of thrips?" "Is it advisable for a retailer or commission house to handle plants or flowers grown by amateurs?" These questions brought out some lively discussions.

It was decided to invite the Toledo florists to accompany the Detroit boys on a trip to Mt. Clemens. The president appointed two committees as follows: Auditing, Robert Flowerday, Albert Bembo, Jerry Stock; entertainment, W. B. Brown, John Dunn, Hugo Schroeter. Norman Sullivan was appointed librarian.

Various Notes.

Philip Breitmeyer and J. F. Sullivan have returned from Cleveland very much impressed with the work of the American Civic Association and hope in the near future to have a similar organization in this city.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business in cut flowers was exceedingly dull in all lines the past week. Decorative work for store openings and fall weddings kept some of the stores quite busy. The retailers say there is lots of room for improvement before we can say that the florists in our city are busy. The weather, too, is against the business. It is too warm. It will take a good frost to make things go as they should.

At the wholesale houses the past week stock of all kinds and grades was plentiful. Chrysanthemums are as yet scarce in this market. More are promised for this week and they should sell for the horse show. Roses of all kinds are improving in quality. Extra fancy Beauties are going to waste for want of demand. The same can be said of other roses. The increase in sale on the day of the Veiled Prophets' ball was not as great as in former years.

Many of our local growers are sending in first-class carnations. These seem to sell better than roses; still the demand is such that many are left over. Violets are of better quality. They will need colder weather to be first-class. Cosmos is now very fine. Lily of the valley has some call. Tuberoses stalks are very plentiful. Smilax is abundant, other greens the same as usual.

Decorative plants are selling fairly well.

Various Notes.

C. Miller, who recently bought out John Burk at Grand and Finney street, has sold out and will retire from business.

F. W. Ude, Jr., at Kirkwood, Mo., is building a fine residence, which will be finished by the end of the month. His greenhouses are in good shape for a big crop of carnations and violets.

The School of Horticulture closed its season on Saturday. Fifty dollars in prizes were distributed among the students. The closing address was made by Walter J. Stevens.

Wm. Kalisch & Sons are making a nice display of cut stock and plants. They report trade fairly good.

F. H. Weber has his show house well stocked with specimen plants.

C. Young & Sons Co. has booked the event of the season, the Wade-Seullen wedding, which will be the most elaborate in years in the way of floral decorations.

Mrs. Vesey, of Fort Wayne, was the guest of the Misses Meinhardt to view the Veiled Prophets' parade.

Mrs. M. M. Ayers had a big run on orchids for use at the Veiled Prophets' ball. The shipment from Pennock's came in fine condition.

August Schuerman had the contract to decorate the big Coliseum building for the horse show which opened Monday.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

"The oldest inhabitant" cannot remember a more beautiful October, but it is not the weather that makes business and to all but the dahlia growers it is most unwelcome. Monday was simply charming, not a cloud in the sky, warm enough for straw hats, and stock of every kind abundant.

The chrysanthemum is here and asserting her prerogatives with no uncertain sound. Magnificent stock in white, yellow and pink already makes the retail windows beautiful. With the addendas of orchids, tritoma and violets and the splendid background of the many varieties of nephrolepis you can imagine how little need the New Yorkers find for flower shows, when every prominent retailer has one of his own, so attractive that even blase society stops to view the entrancing color combinations.

Fine prices are realized for the best mums, as high as $5 a dozen. But the flood has already broken over the dykes and the inrush can already be felt on every side. Six steady weeks of the beautiful stream without cessation and then the real New York season will begin.

Roses of all kinds are abundant. The finest of the Beauties hold at $25 and Maids and Brides at $5 per hundred, but these are only the aristocrats of the shipments and the plebeian horde go at such sacrifices that it would be a shame to quote the prices. Carnations get better in quality every day and, of course, more abundant. Only the best were in demand at $2 and the lower grades fell again to 50 cents. Asters and gladioli have gracefully retired. The dahlia still holds its own. Gunther still receives daily some of the finest blooms from Peacock's 130 acres. New York has been educated this year to an appreciation of the possibilities in this beautiful flower.

Cattleyas are abundant and the retail windows show how they are appreciated. Violets are improving in color, but there are too many of them and the misfortune of street competition makes the situation a serious one both for grower and retailer. The best still hold at 50 cents.

Club Meeting.

The October meeting of the club was held on Monday evening. Over sixty were present and one of our most interesting meetings resulted. Messrs. Hallock, Reid, Ward, Donohoe and Bonilon were elected to membership and Messrs. Hansen, Hoffmeyer, Coyle and Ernschaw proposed. The outing committee gave its final report, showing a balance of $6.29 with all expenses paid. The board of trustees reported, showing a balance of $1,667.23 in the treasury. The commisserate provided abundant refreshments.

A grand exhibit was staged. C. H.

Totty exhibited for the first time the chrysanthemum novelties, Mrs. D. Willis James, scarlet with golden reverse; Lady Henderson, straw yellow; seedlings No. 23 and No. 99, bronze yellow. Of last year's prize winners he showed Mrs. A. J. Miller, pink; Albert Chandler, deep yellow; Merstham Yellow; Lady Hopetoun, heliotrope pink; Beatrice May, pure white; Souv. de Calvat Pere, white, cream center, and White Coombes. For the new varieties a certificate of merit was given and for the old varieties a cultural certificate. Mr. Duckham characterized this exhibit as wonderfully meritorious, especially on account of its earliness, and the best display at so early a date he had ever seen. He particularly commended Beatrice May, Lady Hopetoun and No. 99.

F. R. Pierson Co., of Tarrytown, staged seventy-five varieties of dahlias, many of them new varieties, for which honorable mention was granted. Henri Beaulieu showed a large vase of assorted dahlias and received honorable mention. A. L. Miller showed Pearl of the Park, Camæliaflora and Kaiserin Augusta Victoria, for which he received a cultural certificate. J. T. Lovett, of Little Silver, N. J., made a fine exhibit of single and cactus dahlias, through his New York representative, Joseph Fenrich, for which a cultural certificate was given.

Louis Dupuy, of White Stone, showed a grand vase of Rareniti chrysanthemum, a massive pink, for which he received a certificate for culture. Guttman & Weber staged a vase of Carnation Victory, in splendid condition and quite up to the quality which won it so many honors last season. L. K. Peacock, of Ateo, sent a grand display of dahlias, which was staged by his New York agent, W. H. Gunther, showing over 150 varieties. A certificate for culture was accorded. In Mr. Peacock's 130 acres are over 1,000 varieties. Leh-nig & Winnefeld exhibited several plants of their new pink begonia, for which they secured honorable mention.

Wm. Duckham gave a cordial invitation to the club to attend the meeting of the National Chrysanthemum Society at Philadelphia on November 7. John Birnie addressed the club on his trip to sending Kroeschell Bros. Co., is making New York his headquarters. He reports an excellent business.

Fall fruits and nuts constituted the exhibit and topic of discussion at the first regular meeting of the season of the Horticultural Society of New York on Wednesday at the American Institute.

New retail stores are rapidly opening in every part of the city and so rapid is the growth of New York there seems to be abundant room for all. It would be hard to conceive of any florist of experience, with a fair capital, failing in such a venture here at the present time. The field is the best on the continent. Some firms have three or four prosperous branches. There is no limit to the future of floriculture in New York.

A meeting of the committee having in charge the employees' big ball in January was held on Monday evening and the club will meet every Monday evening hereafter. Matters are progressing nicely and the success of the affair seems assured. A multiplicity of extra duties owing to the continued illness of Mr. Ghormley alone prevents Mr. Coyle's acceptance of the honorable office to which he was elected in connection with the enterprise.

The auctions at Elliott's and Cleary's go merrily on and larger crowds and better prices indicate the growing interest. Why the retail florists do not wake up to this opportunity it is hard to understand. Bargains are numerous. Grand palms and evergreens for decorative purposes do not bring half their values. The auction rooms so far see few of the big retailers in comparison with other years. Brooklyn, however, is awake and some of its best florists are weekly buyers. Even the palm purchasers seem to be waiting for a freeze-up before stocking their stores with the needful plants.

Herbert Greensmith, formerly with the Clucas & Boddington Co., will go to a Connecticut nursery firm.

Ghormley had a shipment of Japanese dwarf plants last week that found a ready sale.

Chas. Millang has just received a large importation from Holland of Aucuba Japonica, boxwood and retinospora in all sizes and varieties. He has secured a large yard for their care and display close to his wholesale house. He has prepared one of his conservatories for the display of his cut chrysanthemums. Mr. Millang has postponed his outing until later in the year and has been unable to get away for his usual trip among his growers on account of the stress of the season's business.

Bridgman has advanced to the Thos. Young Co. store on Fifth avenue as manager and Hanft takes Mr. Bridgman's place at Twenty-eighth street.

A visit to John Scott's place in Flatbush shows an entirely new range of seven houses just completed, aggregating 20,000 square feet, which, with the houses already on the property makes an aggregate of 40,000 feet. Another of 20,000 feet will be erected in the spring of 1906. J. AUSTIN SHAW.

BROCKTON, MASS.

The Fair.

New England's greatest outdoor carnival, the well known Brockton Fair, was held on October 3 to 6. Weather conditions this year were perfect and gate admissions totaled 160,000. On October 5, known as Boston day, 80,250 were present, probably the largest attendance ever recorded at any similar fair in America.

In spite of early frosts there was an extensive display of dahlias from J. K. Alexander, W. P. Lothrop, W. G. Winsor, W. H. Symonds, T. L. Tinkham and many others. Gladioli were also largely shown. Floral designs were quite numerous, but potted plants were below the average, largely because too small a proportion of the $40,000 in premiums is allowed them. Next year we believe they are to be better provided for.

Various Notes.

Business at the stores is now picking up nicely and prospects for fall trade are excellent. A killing frost to wipe out the remaining dahlias, asters and other flowers would be acceptable. Some very good chrysanthemums are now arriving and carnations and roses are daily improving in quality as well as quantity.

W. W. Hathaway reports the past season's trade the best on record. He is well equipped for the coming season, with all the best novelties in plants and cut flowers, as well as sundries. Wellesley rose is a fine seller here and Cattleya labiata is used more each season.

C. A. Read and Mrs. Moir, on Center street, are both anticipating a first-class season. Their windows are quite attractive at all times. Brockton flower stores are equal to any in this state outside of Boston, the owners being thoroughly up to date.

Harry Cole, at the Copeland greenhouses, is cutting good Glory of Pacific and other early mums, also a fine lot of Cattleya labiata. A bench of Cypripedium insigne promises a wealth of bloom. Some 10,000 carnations are grown here and are looking well.

Thomas Greaves, at the Crawford greenhouses, has some 16,000 carnations benched, including some of his own seedlings, which are grown in quantity. Fair Maid is preferred here to Enchantress. Chrysanthemums are grown in considerable numbers. A good many of the singles such as Mizpah and Zeroff in pots make very salable stock.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

The Market.

The past two weeks have been like July, far too hot for the good of stock in the benches. Roses are popping out too fast. Carnations are coming too quickly. Even mums, if the heat continues, are going to all open at once and in a few days the market will be overloaded with the bulk of the early sorts, such as Polly Rose, Bergmann, October Sunshine, Pacific and Willowbrook. Opah and R. Halliday are now practically over. Halliday has demonstrated its claim to being the best and earliest yellow. Lilies are the only scarce flowers; there will soon be plenty of callas.

Business has improved, although the hot weather has hurt shipping, as the out-of-town buyers have most of their own flowers now.

Various Notes.

There have been several store openings. The decorations were mostly plants and asters. The roses used were supplied by a Chicago commission house. The Grand Rapids Floral Co. had two decorations and Crabb & Hunter one.

The West Michigan Fair was a success, both artistically and financially. In the floral department the Grand Rapids Floral Co. and Crabb & Hunter were the main exhibitors. In floral designs Crabb & Hunter were first with a large broken wheel done in white asters, white and yellow roses; the Grand Rapids Floral Co., second. On fancy basket of Beauties, Crabb & Hunter were first, also on best general display of roses and general collection of greenhouse plants. The best table was a surprise, an amateur, Mrs. Wellman, getting first, Crabb & Hunter sec-

The loss by stem-rot in carnations is very heavy. Violet plants are good but the real test, as to whether you are going to have a successful crop or not, depends on carrying them through from the first change of weather to December 1.

most recent new varieties, does not seem likely to sustain its character. In more than one instance I find it is not doing well this season. I remember the old variety "longiflora flammea" when first grown was very good, but it only lasted a few seasons. Dazzler, which was thought so much of when it was first seen, has quite lost its character, being now only a dull red instead of a dazzling scarlet. President Cleveland still holds first place as a scarlet, yet this is inclined to vary, and growers should be careful in selecting stock for propagating purposes. I found at J. Fraser's nursery the stock plants were taken from the earliest batch of plants and allowed to run up and flower early, and later on they are placed in the open where they thoroughly ripen the wood, and make the very best material possible for securing strong, healthy cuttings early in the year. The stock of young plants bears testimony to the fact that the system of culture cannot be much improved upon, and it fully bears out what I have frequently advocated—that is the selection of the very best material possible for stock purposes.

INDIANAPOLIS.

At the State Florists' Association's meeting this month it was decided to co-operate with the Indiana Floral Festival Association in entertaining the visitors to the flower show, Thursday evening, November 16. A committee consisting of F. B. Alley, Sidney Smith, and William Billingsly was appointed to arrange details for this matter.

The railroads have granted a one-fare for the round trip rate all over Indiana during the flower show and exhibitors coming to Indianapolis on Monday and Tuesday should apply to the secretary for their railroad rates.

A complete premium list is being sent out at present and contains heavier premiums than have ever been given in Indianapolis. For instance, 100 American Beauty has five prizes, namely, $100, $75, $50, $35 and $25.

The decorations for Tomlinson hall are well in hand, it being the object not only to exhibit wholesalers' flowers, but to make the show a scene of beauty. While provision is being made for a large number of exhibitors, the secretary is urging that entries be made at an early date, so that all matters will be running smoothly at the opening of the show.

PROPAGATING DIEFFENBACHIAS.

Replying to an inquiry relative to the propagation of dieffenbachias, it may be briefly stated that these plants are readily increased by means of cuttings, the latter rooting without much difficulty in a warm propagating house.

In the case of some of the strong growing dieffenbachias, of which D. imperialis is a type, the top of the plant may be nicked or girdled below the leaves and then the stem mossed up in the same manner as a ficus, and in a short time it will emit roots, after which the top may be cut off and potted up, but should be protected from the sun for a week or so.

The old stump will break again from the lower eyes, and the young shoots may be cut off with a heel of the older wood and then rooted in sand.

The lower portion of the stem of a dieffenbachia may also be cut into single joint sections, the cut surfaces dipped into slaked lime and the sections then barely buried in sand in a warm propagating house, and with proper care most of them will start to grow and root. Either of these operations is best performed in the spring, at which time the root growth is more prompt and sure.

PROPAGATING ALOCASIAS.

Those beautiful foliage plants, the alocasias, are propagated by division of the root stocks, or tubers, the latter bearing much resemblance to those of the common elephant's ear or Colocasia (Caladium) esculentum, though in most instances the tubers of the alocasias are smaller. The best time to perform this operation is in the early spring, just before the plants begin active growth, and the tubers usually show some side growths, or eyes, that may be cut away from the parent root, the cut surface dipped in slaked lime in order to avoid decay, and the pieces planted in sand in a pot or pan, but not covered very deeply.

The pieces of tuber thus planted should be kept in a warm house and watered enough to keep them just moist until they show signs of growth. In the course of a few weeks they should have formed some roots and begun to push up a leaf, and are then ready to be potted off into small pots, using the same open compost and good drainage that is required for all of these moisture-loving plants.

NORRISTOWN, PA.—Wm. R. Yeager has assumed charge of the greenhouses established by his father many years ago, and also the store at 78 East Main street. Mr. Yeager has grown up in the business and will make it show a good growth.

CENTRALIA, ILL.—J. W. Ross entertained the Retail Merchants' Association at his greenhouses September 25. About twenty were present, the grounds and greenhouses being lighted by Japanese lanterns. Refreshments were served and each one received a rose.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—On September 29 each public school in the District held an exhibition of flowers raised by pupils during the summer vacation. The extent of the exhibit in each case showed the interest in horticulture aroused by the school-gardening movement.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, W. S., Mich.; First Vice-Pres., L. L. May, St. Paul; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 24th annual meeting will be held at San Jose, Cal., June, 1906.

THERE were several cases of Harrisii on the last boat from Bermuda. Those who fear unripe bulbs should be satisfied with these.

THE Braslan Seed Growers' Co., San Jose, Cal., has leased the famous Alisal ranch of 855 acres at Salinas. They will have it in seed crops next year.

ROSS BROS., Wichita, Kan., have begun work on a two-story and basement brick seed warehouse 50x140. The firm has been in business twenty-one years.

ONION seed received of the new crop shows a variation in percentage of germination. Other garden seeds so far tested from the same sources show greater uniformity.

FIVE car-loads of peas have been received this week by the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, this being a first shipment of the crop from their northern Michigan growing station.

VISITED Chicago: Max Wilhelmi, of F. Barteldes & Co., Lawrence, Kan.; F. H. Hunter, manager of the seed department of the Germain Fruit and Seed Co., Los Angeles, Cal.

THE wholesale growers report an active demand for early shipments. They are kept busy in the effort to meet this requirement of their customers and present indications point to another good year.

J. W. T. DUVEL, of the seed laboratory of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, says carefully conducted experiments, extending over a period of nearly two years, have shown that cowpeas can be kept free from weevils if stored at a temperature of 32 to 34 degrees. It is understood that this method is practiced to a limited extent by seedsmen, who find it far more satisfactory than the methods of fumigation which have been so generally used. The cost of storage is from 15 to 25 cents per bushel for the season.

REPORTS from all the growing stations are to the effect that the weather has been satisfactory for threshing; that the operations along all lines are moving smoothly and that deliveries are being made in good shape.

FROM the sweet corn and cucumber growers come reports of favorable conditions. The good weather has had a beneficial effect on all the crops still standing, adding considerably to the crop, and the outlook for a good harvest was never better.

THERE are a number of ways of attracting visitors to a seed store in the off season, but none is probably more unique or effective than the flower and baby show annually held in the store of Arthur G. Lee, Fort Smith, Ark., by the lady managers of Belle Point hospital.

F. H. HENRY, assignee for the Clucas & Boddington Co., New York, has decided that it is not possible to reorganize the concern so that the business may be continued. The assets are being sold, Marshall & Co. having purchased the store fixtures for the purpose of adding a retail department to their wholesale and catalogue trade. The Clucas & Boddington Co.'s liabilities approximate $24,000 with nominal assets of $16,000, but it is stated the actual assets will prove not more than one-third this sum.

A LARGE ORDER.

The St. Louis Seed Co., St. Louis, Mo., has an advertisement in a publication supposed to circulate largely among publishers, reading as follows:

Has your paper a buying circulation? If so, we want sample copy and rates. We are now making up our advertising list for the coming season and we want to appear in every paper in the world whose readers are interested in seeds.

Note that the advertisement says "every paper in the world." That looks like a pretty large order. It has been reported that several western seedhouses contemplate branching out next season, but this has every appearance of being "the biggest yet."

AMERICAN VS. BRITISH SEEDS.

A representative of the Jamaica Agricultural Society recently prepared a report for that organization suggesting that the society arrange to import English vegetable seeds and sell them in small quantities to members. He spoke rather strongly against American seeds, which he said had proved to be bad. The secretary of the society has taken exception to this stand and strongly defends the American product, which, he says, is much cheaper than the British article and perfectly reliable.—New York Commercial.

BULB TRADE IN GUERNSEY.

There has been a brisk trade in Isle of Guernsey bulbs this season, says the Horticultural Advertiser. Some of the varieties of narcissi, even of the commoner sorts, have had quite a run made upon them. The first size for forcing have nearly all been bought up, so that it is difficult to purchase a few thousands of N. princeps, Golden Spur, or Irving. Freesia refracta alba is another bulb which has been greatly sought after, and the great demand seems to suggest that growers were generally satisfied with the cut flower trade of early spring. It will be remembered, however, that if the flower trade was good, it was in no small part owing to the action of a very disastrous frost upon the French flower fields along the Riviera, and such a visitation is not likely to occur two years in succession. There may be a further reason for an increase in the flower trade locally and that may be found in the fact that the ordinary Guernsey fruit crops have become less profitable than they used to be, and the grower who finds his profits growing less, has to look around him for whatever catch-crops are within his reach, and as narcissi only occupy the houses for about a month, he finds them about the most convenient and quickest catch-crop of any. English firms, too, have turned their eyes Channel Island-wards for narcissi, and to the writer's knowledge very many tons have been shipped. The bulbs are not nearly so large as those from Holland, but they are hard, solid and heavy, and as their blooming properties are good, these points are bound to be appreciated in good time.

GOOD ADVICE.

A. A. Berry, president of the A. A. Berry Seed Company, Clarinda, Iowa, gives some succinct advice to advertisers:

First—Good copy. Make strong advertisements, with arguments that are convincers. Show good illustrations that will represent the subject offered. Too many make the mistake in showing the cut of something entirely foreign to the thing advertised. The man who has the stuff to sell or the proposition to offer to the public can write best about it but should in every instance get the very best advice that is possible on the subject. See that the advertisement looks attractive. Style of the type and manner in which it is set up has a good deal to do with the looks.

Second—Select good mediums, papers that will pull. Weed out the papers that do not pay. Some papers charge a rate that their circulation will not warrant. We have found that out by experience. The last four years we have carefully keyed our advertising with box numbers, which is probably the best scheme, and after checking up often find a revelation. We always give a paper a second chance and if it falls down two years in succession, then we know there is something wrong. Either it is not the kind of paper to advertise seeds in or is too far distant from us, or the circulation does not warrant the price charged.

We increase appropriations on papers that pay us but have found that sometimes this results in next year's sheet making a poor record and in some instances has brought on the other effect, that of costing us too much for the amount of business it brings us. There is a limit and a person can only find that out by carefully reviewing the results of each year's business and comparing them together and with other papers.

ASTERS.

Some years ago market growers who did bedding plants in large quantities used many of the pits and frames for growing asters after the spring plants had been cleared off, and found them a very profitable crop, says a writer in the Horticultural Advertiser (London), but things have changed, and although we now have much improved varieties of asters, they are far from being a very remunerative line, even when the best sorts are grown well. This year they have been overabundant in the market. By the time English growers had their first in we had been having large quantities from France; and later, when the best quality were coming, we had good chrysanthemums in. For some reason the latter are the favorites, and one salesman told me that aster growers had a bad time this season. They certainly were never more abundant, and though the first I saw were rather poor, we have since had blooms of splendid quality, those of the Comet type being the best. We have these in several decided colors, and the long florets, which are slightly curled, are much more elegant than the old French type. The pure white, bright pink, and mauve are the most desirable.

Although this has been such a bad season for them (owing to the large importations, and the oversupplies from English growers), it is possible that another season may see a change again. It generally follows that after a bad season many drop out, and those who stick to any particular thing, and do it well, will come in well at some time. The Ostrich Plume is a further improvement on the Comet varieties, and it is these that should be the most profitable to grow. I was recently shown some grand blooms of the pure white and the pink, which had been sent direct to the florist from the grower, and they were very fine indeed. With everything grown for market it pays to secure the very best strains procurable, and this is especially the case with asters. A few extra shillings, or even pounds, will soon be made up by having best quality blooms.

PITTSBURG.The Market.

The first week of October was quite satisfactory to all concerned. Every one was busy and several retailers have been hunting extra men. Stock of all kinds is coming in strong, plenty of everything and almost everything very good; chrysanthemums and roses abundant and carnations better every day. The horse show takes place this week and many of the retailers have good orders.

Various Notes.

Some years ago Neville island was the truck garden for Pittsburg, but things have changed of late years, for the soil is being ruined by the many oil wells which have been put down. A number of blast furnaces along the river cover everything with smoke and ore dust, and it is only a question of a short time until the island gardens will be a thing of the past.

Geo. Burke, superintendent of Schenley park, and John Jones, his able assistant, are getting the Schenley park mum show in shape and by next Sunday the crowds at this conservatory will again require a good squad of police to handle them.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club had quite an interesting meeting October 3. There were quite a variety of subjects discussed. Thos. Meehan & Sons sent a fine exhibit of fall blooming herbaceous stuff and H. A. Dreer sent dahlias, hardy asters, tritomas, besides a number of other interesting things, all of which were taken up and discussed separately, to the benefit of all. Henry Frishkorn, with W. C. Beckert, the Allegheny seedsman, at the request of the club made an exhibit of bulbs on which he gave the members a most interesting talk. The varied success which many of the members have had in the past caused considerable comment, but it was conceded by some of the growers that at least a part of the failure was due to bad management in the growing end, and some who have done their own importing admitted that they frequently accepted stock shipped them which a home house would not have dared to send.

W. A. Clarke, of the Pittsburg Cut Flower Co., exhibited hand and pyramid bouquets made in the style in vogue at his entrance into the business about thirty years ago, which caused considerable amusement for the young men. In all it was a very profitable evening.

Mr. Moore, of Allegheny park conservatories, had a handsome exhibit of fancy-leaved caladiums, which attracted a good deal of attention at this late season. It is wonderful how the boys help
